AMUSEMENTS

A welcome and significant offering in the local theatrical scene will be the appearance of "Within the Law" at the opera house on Friday May 12th. When Bayard Veiler wrote the melodrama "Within the Law" he did not realize perhaps that he was giving the stage a plot that was destined to make phenomenal and enduring theatrical history. "Within the Law" opened one night at the Eltinge theatre, in New York city, with little known of it, except that it was a melodrama by an unknown author. Two years later it still was running at the same theatre to crowded houses and both the play and the author's name was known the world over. "Within the Law" was a success from the start because it is a thoroughly human play; because it touches the heart-strings; because it treats of people we know exist but see and know very little of; because it unveils the book of human nature to show its cleanest pages and reveal its greatest truths. Simplicity is the key-note of the story on the surface, yet it is with wonderful subtlety and adroitness that the author has constructed his play. Mary Turner, clerk in a big department store is the principal character. She is unjustly accused of the theft of goods and sent to prison for three years. How her moral salvation is accomplished in the face of the police and the lawyers to make her live down to her record is the theme. The plot is unique and can only be appreciated in the crisp speeches and tense action of the play itself. Around Mary Turner, revolve the most striking array of characters, Aggie Lynch, the shrewd girl whose vernacular is a gem. The brutal police inspector; the fly detective; the police stool pigeon; the mild mannered but dangerous professional crook, and numerous others new to the stage, but just as true to life and fully as interesting. A novel feature is the introduction of a pistol equipped with a Maxim Silencer.
