

STRANGERS WERE FLEEDED IN CALGARY

Game Operated in Rear of a Cafe that Oust the Unwary Much Money.

Calgary, July 10.—The gambling case in which "Big Ben" Holmberg, "Klondike" Edwards and Fred Hill are charged with fleecing several young men out of various sums, came up at the police court yesterday, and was remanded until Tuesday next.

Holmberg and Edwards are out on bail, but Hill is still in jail. A fourth member of the gang, from the police knew nothing at the time of the first arrest, and against whom no complaint has been laid, is still in jail.

Although attempts to buy them off have been made, some of the young men who were victimized are determined to push the matter to the limit as far as the law will permit.

H. A. Wade and George Bunbury, both from the north, were two of the victims, and they fell for $90 and $50 respectively. While a German, name unknown, was victimized for $100, others fell for amounts varying from $10 to $90.

All of the men are now in town and in conversation with some of them last night several additional details of the game were given. The way in which the game worked varied very little. One man was on the street corner and was approached by the "captain" eyeing members of the gang, who made a few remarks concerning the weather and other trivial matters.

He then asked where the victim hailed from, and on being told Edmonton, the man with the crooked lips expressed surprise that they had not met there, an admission that he was also from the capital.

This started up a seemingly friendly conversation and the decoy proceeded a walk, which naturally enough led past the Palace hotel, on the corner of Ninth avenue and Centre street.

At this time the victim was introduced to "Big Ben," who is the head of the gang. In yesterday's issue of the Edmonton Bulletin it was reported that the victims were robbed by means of a game of cards, but this apparently was not the means used on this occasion.

Something Like Roulette. On Wednesday "Big Ben" and his accomplices were running the game after the style of the roulette wheel, and they were doing a thriving business. The victim was blindfolded, and the game was played on a board which was placed on an iron stand, and the number of the ball were a number of holes, and the victims paid as much as they liked for a bet.

When the apparatus was left behind, however, the apparatus was not taken away to the police station, and it is probably not produced as evidence. It is produced, will be minus the arrangement that had been used to fix the machine up, or make a "new one."

BRITAIN SOLVED EGYPT'S PROBLEM

Lord Cromer Tells How British Statesman and Diplomat Solved the Riddle of the Sphinx.

Lord Cromer speaking before the British Club in London on the future of Egypt said in part: Before embarking on my subject, let me make two preliminary observations. The first is one conclusion more than another to which my Oriental experience has driven me, and the second is one conclusion more than another to which my duty of Oriental problems—problems, remember, in respect to which it may be said with truth that the political and administrative issues which are involved are often dominated by the social issues, which, although they perhaps attract less attention, are in reality of even greater importance.

The Nationalist Movement. Lord Cromer proceeded to point out that, in spite of the difficulties which had hindered educational advance, a very notable degree of progress in higher education had been achieved. The result, he said, was that a large and ever-increasing body of young Egyptians were being trained in the schools and colleges of Egypt who were destined in the near future to take a prominent part in the government and administration of their own country.

Chief's Strange Remark. The victim stated that the Chief turned to him later and said, "You were gambling too; what are you making complaint about, these men for the same thing?"

Another case occurred at the Palace, which was fitted up with maps, etc., in the regular real estate office way. Here he met more decoys, and commenced tossing coins for the drinks. The victims joined in, one drinker came to his senses but lost a considerable portion of his bank roll.
