The New Kind of Prison

By H. L. ADAM, Author of "The

I have just been through Penton polis, where I have seen something of the new method of treating prisoners.

Just inside the inner gates are plants in full bloom, and in the main hall there are two large tubs of flowering plants, and one or two vases of cut flowers-things I have never seen before in a prison. Indeed, in the past I have seen a female prisoner at Aylesbury severely admonished for taking a sprig of lavender into her cell.

The walls of Pentonville are being painted a delicate shade of green, which has, says the governor, an enthusiastic humanitarian, a most beneficial effect on the minds of the inmates. Commissioner Enright, of New York, was so favourably impressed on a recent visit that he said he would have the same thing done also the teachers, many of whom, he

Here are further reforms which have recently been introduced at

No descriptions of prisoners and their offences appear on the outside of their cell doors, as heretoforelegends which used to seem to shout their iniquity—but merely a number. Visits by relatives to prisoners may be paid at almost any time by grace of the governor, and the interviews take place in a comfortable sitting room, and not in a "cage," as of old. Prisoners work eight hours a day, exclusive of meal times, which means

The wardens are of a better class, and behave more tolerantly and less aggressively towards their charges than was the custom in the past; they are not allowed to shout at them; there is more individual treatment and the governor boasts that he knows most of the inmates by their

There is an increased number of saths, and cleanliness (which has a eneficial effect on the mind) is more uously insisted upon; there is an honour party," the members of which work entirely without super-rision, and are denoted by a letter H" on the sleeve.

This is evidence that the Camp Hill system is gradually spreading to other prisons. The governor also wants to develop the "parole" system, whereby a prisoner may be temporarily released in order to visit a ick mother, wife, or other relation, which is likewise an extension of a Private visiting is encouraged, and persons interested in prison reform attend and lecture to or converse with prisoners, visit their relations, convey messages, and give advice. The two principal causes of crime, says the governor, are bad home influences (he declares that if girls chopped citron and a little grated or- tine government's new short were taught to cook better there would be less crime) and our wretched system of elementary education.
