"No two people could have been nearer marriage than she and I were. We were within half-an hour of it, Dick; and yet we have parted."

By your doing, or hers?"

"I thought so."
"Dick, I have been compelled to do i When you shall know all, you will acknow-ledge that I could not do otherwise. And yet, in spite of this, I feel that to her I have been but a false hearted knave, as you aptly style me; a despicable, dishonorable man. My father fell into dishonor—or rather had it forced upon him by another-and he could not survive it; he shot himself. Did you know it, Dick?" Shot himself!" repeated Richard, in his surprise. "No, I never knew that. I chought he died of sunstroke."

"My father shot himself," cried Arthur. "He could not live dishonored. Dick, old fellow, there are moments when I feel tempted to do as he did."

"What—because you have parted from "No. That's bitter enough to bear; but I can battle with it. It is the other thing.

no moral eye could see him. Parted from Ellen Adair, the whole world was to him as nothing. A sense of dishonor lay ever upon him, the shame of his conduct towards her was present to him night and day. With all his heart he wished James Bohun had not died, that there might have been no question of his succession. He would then have gone somewhere away with her, have changed his name, and been happy in obscurity. But there was no place unfrequented by man; he could not change his wife's face; and she might be recognized as the daughter of Adair the convict. Besides, would it not be an offense against Heaven if he wedded the daughter of the man who had caused the death of his father? No; happiness could never be his. Look where would, there was nothing around him but pain and misery.

CHAPTER XXVII.

Jelly lived, so to say, on a volcano. She cet that, figuratively speaking, there was not an hour of the day or night but she might be blown into fragments. The rumors as to the death of Mrs. Rane were becoming more terrible. They stole up and down Dallory like a scorching tongue of fire, and Jelly had the satisfaction of knowing that it was she who had first set light to the flame. It was all very well to say that she had made herself safe by securing the evidence of Thomas Hepburn; in her secret conscience she knew that she was not safe; and that, even in spite of that evidence. Dr. Rane might chance to be innocent. what a pretty dilemma she would find her-There was no help for it; she could do nothing. The creeping, scorching tongue went twisting itself in and out, and she could not quench it.

One night Jelly was lying awake, according to custom now, buried deep in some horrible visions that had lately begun to raunt her; now of working in chains; now of stepping incessantly up a treadmill; now of picking oakum and living upon gruel. Turning in the bed, to escape, if possible, these imaginary pictures, she suddenly heard a knock at her door. A loud hasty knock; and now louder. Jelly turned hot, then cold as ice. Had the officers of the law come to arrest her? "Who's there?-what is it?" she asked faintly, not daring to sit up in bed.

"Art thee awake, Jelly!" came the gentle response, as her door was opened a few inches. "I am very sorry to have to ask thee to get up, but my mother is worse,

Make haste, please." Had Miss Beverage's voice been that of an angel, it could not have sounded sweeter to Jelly just then. The relief was great. "I'll get up instantly, ma'am," was the ready answer-and Miss Beverage wondered it should have in it a tone as of gratitude. 'I'll be with you at once.' Mrs. Beverage was subject to violent but rare attacks of spasms. She had felt ill before going to bed, but hoped it would pass off. Jelly and her own two servants were soon at her bedside. She was very iil indeed. Some of them ren to get het water. indeed. Some of them ran to get hot water ready; Jelly thought it would be well to call in Dr. Rane. "I should like the doctor to see her; at the same time, I grieve to arouse him from his sleep," said Miss Beverage.

"Law, ma'am, that's nothing to doctors;

they are used to it," cried Jeily.
"Mother, would thee like Oliver Rane sent for?' asked Miss Beverage, bending over the suffering lady. "Yes—yes," was the feeble answer. "I am very ill, Sarah."

"Go then, Jelly." Away went Jelly. Unbarring their own front-door, she passed out of it, and approached Dr. Rane's. The doctor's professional lamp burnt clearly, and, to her great surprise, Jelly saw that the door was not closed. "He cannot have gone to bed to-night," she thought, as she walked in without ringing. It was past three o'clock. But the house seemed to be still and dark. Jelly left the front-door open, and the light shone a little way into the passage. She tried the surgery-door; it was locked; she tried the dining-room, the key of that was also turned; the kitchen-door stood open, but it was all in darkness.

'He has gone to bed and forgotten to shut up," was the conclusion Jelly now arrived at. "I'll go up and call him."

Groping her way upstairs, she had almost reached the top, when a pale white light suddenly illumined the landing-just the same faint sort of light that Jelly had seen once before, and remembered all to well. Raising her head hastily, there stood-

Not quite at the moment did Jelly know what. Not in the first access of terror did she clearly recognize the features of Bessy Rane. It was she, all too surely; that is, the image of what she had been. She seemed to stand almost face to face with Jelly; Jelly nearly at the top of the stairs, she facing it before her. The light was even more faint before the figure than behind; but there was no mistaking it. What it was dressed in or whence it came, Jelly never knew; there it was—the form and face of Bessy Rane. With a cry of agony, that echoed to the ends of the empty house in the night's silence, Jelly turned and flew down again.

She never looked behind. Out at the front-door went she, slamming it, in her terror, to keep in what might be following her; and she almost gave forth another scream when she found herself touched by some one coming in at the gate, and saw that it was Dr. Rane. "I am called out to a country patient," he quietly said. "Whilst I was putting the horse to the gig, an impression came over me that I had left my house-door open, so I thought I had better come back and see.

What are you doing here at this hour, Jelly?

Jelly was in terrible distress and con-fusion of mind. Clutching his arm as if for protection, she sobbed for an instant or two Any one ill? hysterically. Dr. Rane stared at her, not knowing what to make of it. He began to think she must require his services her-

"Sir-do you know-do you know who is in the house? "Nobody's there; unless they've come in these last few minutes—for I suppose I did leave the door open," was Dr. Rane's rejoinder, and his composure contrasted strongly with Jelly's emotion. "When I leave my house at night, I carry my household with me, Jelly."

"Your wife's there," she whispered, with a burst of agony. "Sir, it's as true as that I am living to tell it."

"What do you say?" Jelly's answer was to relate what she had When Dr. Rane had gathered in her full meaning, he grew very angry.
"Why, you must be mad, woman," he cried in a low concentrated voice. "This is the second time. How dare you invent such folly?" "I swear that her ghost walks, and that it is in there now," exclaimed Jelly, almost beside herself. "It is on the landing, exactly where I saw it before. Why should she come again?—why should she haunt that one particular spot? Sir, don't look at me like that. You know I would not invent such a thing. "Your fancy invents it, and then you speak of it as if it were a fact. How dare

But he could not appease Jelly; he could not persuade her out of her belief. And the doctor saw that it was useless to attempt it. (To be Continued.)

Shipley and Mr. Jas. Roberts presented him, on behalf of the class, with a beautiful set of Barnes' Commentary of the New Testament as a slight token of the esteem in which he was held by the class. Mr. Rosser made a suitable reply, thanking them for their esteem and regard for him. The gathering was a complete surprise.
