Photography as an art has attained such a standard of excellence that no pains are too infinite to enhance its effectiveness. While the primary object in any likeness in to portray the features, the pose, the individual, yet it cannot be gainsaid that much of our pleasure in viewing the countenance, however perfectly dipicted, may be seriously marred by the unhappy selection of an unbecoming gown.

It is a mistake to wear one's richest and most sumptuous; costume instead of one whose design, being less pronounced, is, consequently, less apt to look grotesque a few seasons hence. Certain materials are risky, to say the least, in a photogrpah. Satins or sliks with high luster throw lights and shadows which are harsh and unexpected in reproduction. Translucent fabrics are by fix to be preferred. Softly folding, easly draped, and not pronounced are onepes, either silk or wool, and chiffon. Tulle, nets and such lacelike trapsparent effects dein a general way, they are to be considered as secondary in importance, although as draperies they may be styled par excellence. Origin of Blanket.

[From a Letter of Seyer's, 1339.—Notes and Queries.]

an enterprising burgess of Bristol began to introduce into Bristol a new manufacture, which eventuto a new manufacture, which eventually gave him a name and immortalized his filme. Thomas, henceforth known as Thomas Blanket (blanchette, a white cloth), set up looms in his house and hired weavers to make a better kind of fabric (i.e., superior to bluett, russet faldings and a striped cloth for servants called Bristol cotton), bleached in the wool, close woven, almost like felt, and fairly waterproof. As a matter of course, there was an outcry against this, the authorities, and the weavers in particular, not liking to see foreign and better skilled artisans brought into their town. So the mayor and builiffs levied a rate upon them for setting up their machines. The king, however, had more perspicacity than they, and by the following letter relieved the young manufacturers of the impact of t polic (sic) burden. It is addressed to the mayor and bailiffs. (Here it is given in extenso.) At considerable length it decrees that no let or hindrance is to be given Thomas Blanket and others, burgesses of the said town of Bristol; that they shall erect such machines as they like, and there shall be no hirdrance nor reproach (calum-nia' given them for thus doing."

The Last Irish Wolf.

Ireland was much infested with wolves, down to a period comparatively recently, says the London Spectator. That noble dog, the Irish wolfhound, has been bred from remote times for their destruction. William Russell records in his diary that in 1596 he and Lady Russell went wolf-hunting in Kilmainham—quite close to the capital! In 1710 a presentment was made in County Cork for destroying the beasts, and Macaulay quotes a poem published in 1719 to prove that they were quite common in Munster at that time. A writer in the Dublin Penny Magazine was acpend as much upon the materials the Dublin Penny Magazine was ac-which are used for foundations, that, quainted with an old man whose mother remembered that many wolves were slain in Wexford about 1730-40; and he cites a popular tradition that the last wolf was killed in the Wicklow mountains in 1770. There was a large handsome opera cloak or long ostrich stone-built sheepfold which the marauders were accustomed to visit, and thither Carragh repaired at midnight, accompanied only by a boy twelve years of age and two wolfhounds. "Now," said Carragh to the boy, "as the two wolves usually enter the op-posite extremities of the sheepfold at the same time, I must leave you and one of the dogs to guard this one while I go to the other. He steals with all the caution of a cat; nor will you hear him, but the dog will, and positively will give him the first fall; if therefore you are not active when he is down, to rivet his neck to the ground with this spear, he will rise up and kill both you and the dog. So good-night." "I'll do what I can," said the little boy, as he took the spear from the wolf hunter's hand. Carragh departed for his own station, and the boy, entering the inclosure, crouched down within the gate with the dog beside him. The cold and darkness af-fected the child so much that soon, in spite of his danger he dozed off into stupor. He was roused by the roar of the great dog as he bounded upon the wolf that was stealing by. the wolf that was stealing by. The hound flung his enemy upon the ground, and so held him for an instant.

Cape Town, May 4.—The Kimberley branch of the South African League is convinced that the object of the Boer leaders in refusing to make any formal terms of surrender that would imply their loss of independence is for the purpose of allowing them to renew hostilities in the future if they so desire. AMENDMENT TO CRIMINAL CODE.

Mr. Bruneau Proposes a Radicai Change In It.

Would Empower Loan Companies to Hold Lotteries-Elections Bill

Disposed Of.

Ottawa, May 3.—The house and a capital day's work today, disposing of the elections bill, the franchise bill. the postoffice bill and a large amount of supplementary estimates, adjourning at midnight.

LOAN COMPANY LOTTERIES. Mr. Bruneau introduced a bill to amend the criminal code. He explained that its object is to place all loan companies in Canada on the same footing as the Credit Foncier Franco-Canadian and the Credit Foncier du Canada. These two companies by their charters are empowered to hold lot-teries, and Mr Bruneau's bill proposes to extend this privilege to all other loan companies in all the provinces.

FRUIT INSPECTION BILL PASSED The senate considered in committee the bill to provide for the marking and inspection of packages containing fruit for sale. Hon. Mr. Mills moved to amend the last section by giving power to the governor-in-council, when making regulations, to in-clude a fine not exceeding $50 as a penalty in cases of offenses against This was carried, and the bill as amended reported. The amendments were concurred in and the bill read a third time and passed.

CHRISTIAN ISRAELITES

Combination of Christian and Jewish Beliefs.

[From the Literary Digest.] The east side of New York is wellknown to be the gathering-place of a large number of interesting and unusual creeds, both political and religiusual creeds, both political and religious. Here all advanced beliefs are in favor, and various schools of socialism, and of its philosophical antipode, anarchism, flourish like the green baytree. One of the most singular of these little-known faiths is that of the Christian Israelite Church, whose only place of worship is a small building at 103 East First street. A student of east side life writes of this denomination as follows: follows:
"One of the distinctive peculiarities of the doctrine of the Christian Israel-ite Church is its combination of the beliefs of the Jewish and Christian faiths. All the Hebrew ceremonial concerning purification of meats and of washing and ablutions are strictly adhered to by the modern Israelites, and one of its most strict requirements of believers is that no regardable come when its most strict requirements of believers is that no razor shall come upon their heads. The matter of sacrificing animals is eliminated from the ceremonial. On the other hand, the Christian Israelites are emphatic in their belief in Christ as a Redeemer, and on all points of orthodox (Christian) faith they are eminently sound. The mixed all points of orthodox (Christian) faith they are eminently sound. The mixed character of the belief of this church may be seen from the fact that acceptance of the four (sic) Books of Moses and of the four Gospels are necessary to membership in the church. But it is in their belief as to how things are going to be arranged during the millen. going to be arranged during the millen-nium and afterward that the Christian Israelites are unique. They believe that 144,000 'immortals' are to be in charge 144,000 'immortals' are to be in charge of matters on the earth during the millennium, which is to begin within the present generation, some setting the date as early as 1917. The favored 144,000 will rule the earth, judge those who hav already departed this life, and As many as accept the opportunity will who have already departed this life, and As many as accept the opportunity will be permitted to retain their bodies, but must be subject to the 'immortals' throughout eternity. Those who do not take advantage of their last chance may never have their bodies, but must may never have their bodies, but must forever be spirits. So also must those who have died before the millennium, and those who have died in their sins be relegated to a still lower estate, becoming of the last order of creation. There are to be none lost absolutely, and one of the believers in the faith ventured the hope that somewhere in the aeons of the believers in the faith ventured the hope that somewhere in the aeons of the future God might find some way to permit mortals to become immortals and the disembodied to resume their bodies.

"The denomination started in England in 1792 by the preaching of Joanna Southcot. She was followed in 1822 by John Wroe, whose last utterance in 1869 is regarded by the church as the last revelation from God. A symbolic half-hour of forty years of silence has been over the church since, but it is expected that it will soon be broken by another revelation. In 1830 the Christian Israelite doctrines were first preached in this country and the preached in this country and the church in this city was erected in 1852. There are representatives of the faith in some eighteen or twenty States of the Union."

CHILDREN CREMATED!

Four Little Ones Playing Alone in the House

Muskegon, Mich. May 4 .- Four little children were burned to death yesterday in a farmhouse, six miles from this city. The victims were: Thomas Wertman, aged 3: John Wertman, aged 41/2; Jennie Kooi, aged 4 years, and Hennec Kooi, aged 8 months.

Mrs. Wertman, who was alone in the house with the children went out to the well for a pail of water, and when she returned found the house in flames. It burned so rapidly that she could not enter it to aid the children, and they perished.
