

"SPRING FEVER"

The need of a spring medicine seems to be universal. This is due to the fact that during the winter the blood becomes impure on account of the hearty food eaten. This causes that tired, weary, all-gone, don't-care-to-work feeling, which is so prevalent at this time of year.

BURDOCK BLOOD BITTERSThat Tired Feeling.

Mr. F. H. Leard, Saskatoon, Sask., writes: "I have used Burdock Blood Bitters as a blood builder and think it an excellent remedy. Everyone should take it in the spring to cure that tired feeling that comes to so many at this time of year."

Uses It Every Spring.

Mr. H. Langley, Hamilton, Ont., writes: "I have used Burdock Blood Bitters as a spring tonic, and I find it the best thing I can take. It builds me right up and I use it every spring. It is excellent for the blood."

THE STRENUOUS LIFE

PULLS SO HARD ON THE STOMACH IT MUST HAVE HELP.

The stress and strain of the strenuous life in both city and country makes stomach troubles. Five people suffer today where one did ten years ago with sick headache, dizziness, flatulence, distress after eating, specks before the eyes, bloating, nervousness, sleeplessness and the many other symptoms of indigestion. All who are suffering with stomach troubles, and that means at least two out of three in London and other towns, should use Mi-o-na stomach tablets. Nothing else is as safe, yet effective; nothing else can be so thoroughly relied upon to relieve all troubles from indigestion as Mi-o-na. So reliable is Mi-o-na that W. T. Strong, with every 50-cent box he sells, gives a guarantee to refund the money unless the remedy cures.

Cure for Drunkenness

Urine Treatment to Be Used at Home Without Publicity or Loss of Time From Business.

The best aid to temperance is something that will strengthen the drunkard's wrecked nervous system and cure his unnatural craving for drink. We believe that any man who really desires to be cured of the liquor habit can cure himself by using Urine. This remarkable treatment has made so many cures that we are glad to sell it under an absolute guarantee to refund the money if it does not cure. It is in two forms: No. 1, that can be given secretly, and No. 2, for those who wish to be cured. It is not only the most reliable treatment known, but it is also the most economical, as it costs only $1 a box, and there is no detention from the usual duties, while if a cure is not effected there is no expense whatever. FOR A MILLION OF MONEY

BY ARTHUR W. MARCHMONT
Author of "By Right of Sword," "When I Was Czar," etc., etc.
Copyrighted, 1908.

"Now, my dearest, I can't stay more than a few minutes, and you must just let me tell you all I can cram in to the time without interrupting to ask any questions or scold or anything. First, you are cleared about that robbery of the papers. Merridew was mixed up in it, and he brought them here; I found them, and Mr. Casement has them. But for a time you must not do anything. Those arrests in London—that of the girl you recognized among the others—were my doing; I can't stop to tell you how I found out everything, but Mr. Casement will tell you now." And in the same brief manner she told him of Merridew's conduct; that he believed he had murdered her; and that after her escape she had come to Silver-bush as a servant, but really as a spy.

He listened breathless with interest, astonishment and rage; and at first was for going straight back to the Manor to have it out with Merridew. But Olive declared that this would ruin everything, and in the end he calmed him, and succeeded in winning him round to promise that he would do nothing to interfere with her plans. He was hard to convince but her quiet, firm insistence prevailed in the end.

No one had a suspicion that she was other than just the Irish girl, she told him; and the fact that even he himself had been mistaken was the proof that she was in no danger. Besides, both he and Mr. Casement now knew where she was; and even if she were discovered by Merridew, they would be able to come to her help.

This was the argument which won him round; and when they parted he had promised her faithfully that no act of his should betray the fact that he knew her to be even alive.

"But why couldn't you have told me that?" he asked. "It has been a terrible time."

"Because I could not warn you against Mrs. Taunton, Jack. She would have guessed your secret in a moment, even if you had not told her."

"By Jove! I never thought of that. Of course, I've seen her often and have spoken freely of it all."

"Don't see her again. She'll notice the difference instantly. You had better not go back to London."

"What a devil of a woman! I won't go near her again," he said quickly. "Yes, but you must have an excuse, or she'll suspect. Talk it over with Mr. Casement."

"He's deep, too. Never let on a word about you. Even told me there were a couple of letters for you, and asked what I thought he had better do with them."

"They may be from Selma Hammond, Jack. Tell him to open them, and let her see the girl somewhere within reach. She may be necessary. And now, dearest, I must go, or I shall be missed."

It took some minutes before Jack could tear himself away, and then he got in unobserved to the house, hoping to get in unobserved.

But Dawleigh's jealousy had been roused. He had caught a glimpse of Olive in the drive; and just as she slipped into a side door he met her, wanted to know where she had been, and then he saw that she had been meeting some other man.

Olive let him talk as long as he would, in order to see what his suspicions really were, and whether he had an idea that it was Jack whom she had seen. Satisfied on this point, she let him see another side of her character. She first forced a few tears, and then flew into a passion. A flood of angry invective poured in a torrent from her lips, all in her rich, rest brogue; and with a threat that she would never speak to such a spalpeen again, she appeared to break down, and burst into tears as she pushed him on one side and went up to bed.

Eager though she was to learn what the Merridews said to one another about Jack's visit, she did not leave her room again that night. She was too agitated to do any work coolly, and she dared not run any risk.

Catching sight of the present which Dawleigh had brought her from London, she picked up the newspaper in which it had been concealed and was tossing it aside when a heading caught her attention, and she began to read it. It was the report of the discovery of a great forgery; and in writing it up mention was made of other great forgeries, and at the close there was a paragraph about George Purvis with his name in large type at the head.

He was to be released at once, on ticket of leave!

In a flash the thought occurred to her to use this to test the effect upon the following morning to clean her mistress's rooms. She went to find the paragraph in the morning paper and arranged it so that it was sure to be read by her, and then observe the result.

She knew Mrs. Merridew's habits so well that it was easy for her to place the paper in a spot where it would be sure to attract her attention; and she was busy sweeping out the adjoining room when the mistress passed through from her bedroom.

"Can't you do your work with less noise?" she asked Olive sharply. "You go about your work like an elephant."

"Sure, I beg your pardon, ma'am. I thought O was as silent as St. Peter's Cross, savin' the reference to such a holy man."

"Your broom keeps knocking the skirting and the furniture as if you were beating a tattoo all round the room. You'll do no end of damage in that way. You must be more careful if you want to stay here. Mind that."

"It's that sorry I am, ye'll not know there's a mouse in the room, ma'am, for the future; but I was hurrying to get done before you should be up, ma'am."

"Well, don't make such a clatter. A well trained servant doesn't need to make a quarter of the noise over her work." And with that she passed on into her sitting-room and shut the door.

Olive went on with her work very quietly and then followed. "Will I be cleanin' the bedroom at onst, ma'am?" she asked, very humbly; "or will I finish what I'm at first?"

"I don't arrange your work, girl. Do what Mrs. Cooper has told you." She had the paper in her hand and spoke very sharply, annoyed by the interruption.

"Sure, Mrs. Cooper told me to ask ye, ma'am."

"Oh, go away, and don't bother me about it. Finish what you're doing first—anything. I'm surprised you should be told to ask me such questions."

Olive withdrew, carefully leaving the door slightly ajar and made a pretense of sweeping, while she listened eagerly.

She heard a quick rustle of the paper, then an exclamation of concern, followed almost directly by a low cry.

She opened the door and peeped in. "Did ye call me, ma'am? Sure, ye're ill," she cried, and crossed to Mrs. Merridew, who was lying with her head on her arms stretched out on the writing table where Olive had put the paper.

She looked up as Olive approached, and her face was gray and drawn with fear.

"I'm feeling faint," she murmured. "Oh, God!"

Olive ran through into the bedroom and fetched some eau-de-cologne. With this she bathed Mrs. Merridew's forehead and temples, uttering many little exclamations of concern and offers to call for help, and in this way restored her just as she was on the verge of unconsciousness.

"Tell Mrs. Merridew I must see him at once," said Mrs. Merridew, as soon as she had recovered sufficiently to speak. "You're a good girl. Tell him at once."

Olive ran to Merridew's room and told him the mistress was "ill, like death," giving the message with many gasps and sobs, and holding her handkerchief to her eyes as if crying bitterly. She did not wish him to see her eyes.

He asked the cause, but could get nothing out of her, so great was her agitation, and taking alarm he hurried to his mother's room.

As soon as he was gone Olive ran to the secret recess.

"What's the matter, mother? I could get nothing out of that wild Irish fellow," she heard him say.

"George Purvis is to be freed at once, Gilbert. God help me, it will ruin everything. What are we to do?"

"Released at once!" cried Merridew in a voice no less agitated than his mother's. "How do you know?"

"It's here."

Olive heard the rustle of the newspaper as she gave it to him, and waited breathlessly during the pause while he read it.
