REV. FATHER DURKIN TAUGHT MAN LESSON

Forcibly Ejected Disturber From a New York City Parochial School.

Rev. Father John J. Durkin, formerly of this city, but at the present time rector of St. Vincent Perrier Roman Catholic Church, New York City, was the hero of an exciting adventure on Wednesday last and later of police court proceedings.

John Durkin was creating a disturbance in the church parochial school, of which Father Durkin is pastor, and after several warnings was ordered to leave.

Downs did not elect to go quietly, but placing his hand on his hip pocket he threatened to shoot.

Father Durkin immediately seized Downs, with the result that the latter was shot out the doorway rather forcibly, alighting on his head, which was bruised considerably.

In revenge, Downs had Father Durkin summoned before Magistrate Barlow, of the Yorkville police court.

Complained the Priest.

After hearing the evidence Magistrate Barlow complimented Father Durkin on his presence of mind, and quick action, and declared that no charge had been made against him.

"If you are a good clergyman as you are a pugilist, I would like to go to your church," was Magistrate Barlow's comment. "You are not under arrest, and I dismiss the case with thanks to you for coming here."

Father Durkin is the son of Dr. Michael Durkin, the well-known Grand Trunk engineer, living on Hill street.

He received his early education in the city, and made a considerable reputation as an athlete, being a particular good ball player. He was extremely popular, and the incident related here is considered highly characteristic by his friends. On his vacations to London he has occupied the pulpit of the Catholic churches of the city, officiating in St. Mary's Church on the occasion of his visit here last summer.

TORONTO DOG SCARE.

Toronto, June 15.—Four boys having been bitten by vicious dogs in the city of Toronto yesterday, there is fear of an epidemic of this kind of thing such as caused considerable excitement in the city at the end of last summer.

Mayor Oliver said this morning that one child was worth all the dogs in the city, and that a meeting of the board of control would be called at an early date to pass a bylaw to have all dogs muzzled.

UNION IN REMOTE DISTANCE

or what it does not believe to be a truth, while another emphasizes it. And until the different communions lovingly study each other's points of difference and arrive at an understanding upon them, and come to see that they really supplement rather than contradict each other, the cause of unity will not be advanced.

Obstacles To Union.
Another point taken for granted throughout the discussion was that nothing could be gained by one branch of a communion entering into any scheme of union locally without the concurrence of the whole communion.

If, for instance, the Church of England in Canada and the Presbyterian or Methodist, or both, should agree upon a scheme of organic union, it would not be a union, but the result of another division. Any scheme of union, therefore, must be based upon a basis locally should have the concurrence of the whole body throughout the world.

Extending Episcopate.
But the most important pronouncement of the conference upon the subject of resolution 75, where it suggested a way of extending the historic episcopate to non-episcopal communions; i. e., on lines suggested by the precedent of 1810. The precedent of 1810 was the consecration of three bishops for the Scotch Presbyterian Church without reordination as deacons and priests and without disarrangement of the Scottish system of general assembly, synods and presbyteries. This works a distinct advance upon previous conferences. The conference of 1887 laid down the famous quadrilateral as the basis of possible union with non-episcopal communions. The first three parts of that basis, namely: the Bible, the creeds, and the two sacraments were generally accepted, but the fourth, namely, the historic episcopate, proved a stumblingblock. The present resolution is to show how the Church of England is prepared to extend to the non-episcopal communions the historic episcopate in its report was careful to make it clear that in insisting on the necessity of episcopal ordination for the ministers of our own communion we expect to be members, we in no wise condemn others. The report says: "Anglican churches may offer communion to the ministry, as they understand it, and regard themselves as absolutely bound to stipulate for themselves, and for the communion of which they are members. But it is no part of their duty, and therefore not their desire to go further and pronounce negatively upon the value in God's sight of the ministry in other communions. The statement ought, as the committee says, to remove misunderstanding and make for peace."

The Present Attitude.
The present attitude of the Church of England towards non-episcopal communions as regards the historic episcopate may therefore be stated as follows:

"We regard the relation of the historic episcopate as essential in any scheme of church union."

"We are prepared to extend the historic episcopate to non-episcopal lines suggested by the precedent of 1810."

"This last is the bridge which the conference has offered. And it remains now to be seen whether the other communions are prepared to meet the Anglican church in this, I think, most reasonable and generous attitude."

A Disappointing Reply.
The first pronouncement on the part of other communions, or any considerable section of them, upon the latter proposal, was the reply of the joint committee of the Presbyterians, Methodists and Congregationalists in Canada to the resolution of our own Synod, which substantially repeated the Lambeth resolution. The reply was, to say the least, disappointing to the friends of unity, and the attitude expressed is unalterable in its view to unity between them and us is closed, for the present at least, in so far as their collective action is concerned by their refusal, however, from our point of view, serve one wholly good purpose—it will clear the air of side issues and compel the public, and especially our own people, to read and to think about the church's ministry and its history. This will be altogether good, for the more the position of the church is studied in the light of Scripture and of history, the stronger will it be shown to be. Hitherto there has been too much vagueness upon these subjects, too much tendency to whitewash down what is distinctive of the church. The result has been a confusion of ideas, and the church's ministry and its history must be clearly taught and understood."

A Consultative Body.
The matter of a central consultative body was next discussed by his lordship. "A special body which might be consulted on special points, if thought desirable, but which should have no jurisdiction over the church as a whole. Any bishop or branch of the church may ask for its opinion when desirous of having knowledge upon some difficult point of doctrine or administration or of mutual relationship not provided for in the ordinary formulas and canons of the church."

"Thus the central consultative body will tend to safeguard the independence of our communions to secure united action on the part of the whole church in such important matters as negotiations for unity with other communions, and to a distinct extent in advance in the general organization of the church."

The New Hymnal.
The general synod was next discussed, and the benefits of the new hymnal were exhaustively outlined. The duties and objects of the Sunday school communion, in systematic and putting the Sunday school work on an efficient basis, were expounded, and the significance of the establishment of a new missionary diocese in China was explained.

Chinese Missions.
The new venture in China continued his lordship. "It is intimately connected with the laymen's missionary movement, of which once again I desire to say a word. It was probably under the inspiration of that movement that the general board of missions embarked upon its new enterprise. The General Synod gave its imprimatur to the movement, and a series of meetings were held in Ottawa during the sessions. But somehow the movement has not yet taken hold of our people in the diocese to the extent that I would like to see it. With the exception of a few places, it is only talked of, and the laymen stand aloof. In the places where the laymen have really become awake to their responsibility, the result is plainly visible in more abundant returns. We hope during the latter part of this year to inaugurate an organized effort throughout the diocese to awaken our laity to the magnificent opportunity of inspiration which is contained in the movement. We look to the laymen's missionary movement to create a wider vision of the church's work, and so to inspire men to give on a larger scale than the minimum."

The Laymen's Movement.
The bishop urged strongly upon the clergy the advisability of intense responsibility, the result is plainly visible in more abundant returns. We hope during the latter part of this year to inaugurate an organized effort throughout the diocese to awaken our laity to the magnificent opportunity of inspiration which is contained in the movement. We look to the laymen's missionary movement to create a wider vision of the church's work, and so to inspire men to give on a larger scale than the minimum."

A Marriage Question.
The marriage of deceased husbands' brothers, several cases of which had been brought to his lordship's notice during the year, were strictly and wholly unlawful, not only by the law of the church, but also by the law of the land, and persons connected in such a union could not be recognized as communicants.

With regard to the participating in the work of prayer services of other churches, his lordship thought that the services are conducted in their own churches in their own way.

Huron College.
Regarding Huron College, his lordship spoke of the need for a man to canvass for the need of an endowment fund and asked that if such a one were appointed he be given the whole-hearted support of the clergy.

"The welfare of the diocese," he said, "is intimately bound up with the efficiency of the college; but the college can never be what it ought to be until it is sufficiently endowed, and the least that we should aim at is $50,000, which is not by any means beyond our power to do in five years."

His lordship then spoke of the appointment of a new professor for the college the action had been made possible by the generosity of the Colonial and Continental Church Society $300,000 received by the gift of a number of the laymen of the diocese. A first-class university man will be secured who will reside in the college, and have charge of its internal discipline.

The cogent question of obtaining young men for the ministry of the church was then discussed.

Clerical Stipends.
The matter of clerical stipends, too, was considered. His lordship pointed out that the minimum of $750 was less than many laboring men received who had required no special training, and he suggested that the minimum be raised to $800.

Approves Three-fifths Clause.
On the question of temperance his lordship outlined the attitude of the church, as the Scriptural meaning of the word, as control, self-control, not necessarily abstinence, although self-control may take that form when dictated by prudence and love and consideration for others. The Scriptural ideal of temperance, whether in eating, or drinking, or pleasure in an form, is to be able to use these things of the world without abusing them. In this connection the three-fifths clause was favorably spoken of as being the truest standard, as a matter of fact, and the most effective way of meeting the question as well.

Favors Compensation.
His lordship thought that when licenses were cancelled there should be some manner of compensation given. This he thought was only according to the principles of British fair play.

Scores Published Odds.
Betting and gambling came in for a strong denunciation, and the newspapers were severely scored for publishing the odds on sporting events, and thus indicating the gambling spirit in the minds of the young. The growing prevalence of this evil in social circles was mentioned as a matter of deep concern, and the clergy were urged to stigmatize the society people who could not enjoy a small game without placing odds on the issue as professional gamblers.

The cable dispatches regarding the conditions existing in the English Church of the old land were severely criticised. They told only one side of the story, said his lordship, and matters were made worse when editors wrote editorials from the one-sided

WOMAN SETS NEW SWINDLING RECORD

Gets Lunch in Swell Paris Hotel Completes Trousseau and Motor Rides Free.

Paris, June 15.—The young woman who a few days ago got a good lunch at an expensive hotel in Paris, a complete trousseau and a motor ride all without paying a cent, and all within four hours, established a record in swindling.

She was charmingly dressed and seemed to be about 20. She arrived at a fashionable hotel on the Avenue de l'Opera, said she was the wife of a French baron, whose name she gave, and engaged the best suite of rooms. After an expensive luncheon in her apartments she called for a motor car—without a taxi, as it looked better. The car came with a splendid chauffeur and she drove to a dressmaker's, where she ordered a quantity of clothes to be ready in a few hours.

From there she went to a lingerie shop and ordered a pile of garments. These were brought to her hotel, where she went through them, rejecting some. Having selected what she would keep she went downstairs "to get change from the porter." At the door her motor was still waiting and she placed the lingerie in it and drove back to the dressmaker's.

There she put on one of the silk gowns, and had the others packed up. She offered the use of her car to the dressmaker's son, who drove off in it with the bill to present to her husband, who she said would be arriving at the hotel and would pay it. She herself took a cab with one of the dressmaker's girl assistants to carry the parcels.

The dressmaker's son on reaching the hotel found only the lingerie shop messenger, who was growing uneasy. The two men hurried out to the dressmaking establishment, where they breathed easier on learning that an assistant had accompanied the customer. But the girl came back alone and crestfallen.

She had been sent to buy a box of candy, while the lady waited in the cab. When she came out the cab had gone, and the lady, who had come with the bill to present to her husband, who she said would be arriving at the hotel and would pay it. She herself took a cab with one of the dressmaker's girl assistants to carry the parcels.

TRAMP IS THE HOST OF CLOSED HOTEL

Takes Possession, Sleeps in Best Bed and Sells the Art Contents.

New Orleans, June 15.—For brazen effrontery and unadulterated gall, Robert Simms, alias Simmons and Summers, stands in a class by himself, say the police. To carry away fully $2,000 worth of furniture, paintings, statuary and works of art, two wagonloads, in the heart of the city, in broad daylight, is not by any means an easy job, yet thus far Simms appears to the police as the only one engaged in the work.

Messrs. George S. Paul, Emil Kuntz, son-in-law of the late P. F. Herwig, and Girault, Farrar discovered the theft when they visited the premises known formerly as the St. Charles Mansion, but latterly as the Hotel de Leon. The house and contents were owned by Mr. Herwig, and form part of the estate left by him. The house was elaborately furnished, and was considered the finest boarding-house in the city. On April 9 an inventory of the contents was taken, and the place was locked.

About three weeks ago Bob Simms, a shrewd and well educated man, formerly a railroad clerk, seeing the magnificent establishment, luxuriously furnished, and no one occupying it, found the back gate unlocked. He opened the gate and walked in. Ascending to the upper floors he selected the most comfortable bed and slept that afternoon and night undisturbed. And so it went on until a few days ago there came for him a rude awakening and a transfer from his hotel to jail.

During the two weeks of his unalloyed comfort and luxury, Bob, a stout, portly kind of fellow, good-natured and jovial, amused himself in strutting in front of his hotel, to the astonishment of the neighbors. To these he introduced himself as the watchman, and the neighbors looked on him as one of the most faithful watchmen they had ever seen, for he was there night and day.

On two occasions furniture carts entered the driveway, and each time came out with large loads of furniture. The very finest suites in the house were on these wagons, and Bob superintended the loading and directed the men where to take the stuff, said the neighbors.

Large Japanese vases and mirrors and statuary, they assert, were carried off by Bob himself. Bob was fond of all he surveyed, he had plenty of money, plenty to eat and drink and a magnificent bed to sleep in, and a lordly mansion all his own.

Then came the rude awakening. Bob had retired in the early morning, for he kept fashionable hours, and long after the noon hour snored peacefully in his fine bed. The three men called. To their surprise they found a key sticking in the door, and could not open it
