didn't overlook telling his audience that he had "wasted 12 good hours preparing an address" upon the understanding that he was coming to deliver one of his famous addresses about hydro-operated washing machines and so forth.

From the viewpoint of the Liberal candidate, Miss Isabel Armstrong, it could be readily assumed that the candidate, Miss Isabel Armstrong, it could be readily assumed that the evening was entirely satisfactory. It was Miss Armstrong's initial public address since her nomination, and while she did not touch upon the white she aid not touch upon the political activities of the day, she was afforded the opportunity to meet a representative gathering of North Londoners, and her address, brief but timely and effective, won her, without a doubt, new supporters in that disdoubt, new supporters in that dis-

The Tory candidate explained that trict.

The "no politics" sign was hung out early by the hostess to the obvious disappointment of many visitors, and at least two of the candidates. Dr. Stevenson acknowledged that he did not know just what to talk about if politics were banned, and after deliberation evidently concluded that there was no other alched that there was no other alched. the last election was an indication of the latter phase of his popularity After Sir Adam's next remark, one vonders what he is going to do with nis "12-hour address" already prepared, or why he even bothered about "I am not going to spoil the even-ing by talking politics," he advised, and then he evidently assumed the attitude that if they were not going to let him talk politics last night, they wouldn't hear from him until just before the election. cluded that there was no other al-ternative in such a fix—talk politics anyhow.

Sir Adam appeared keenly disappointed. It was his unlucky night. In the first instance he came in the wrong way—came under the rope and not through the main entrance where the paid admissions were being received. But the ladies were not going to let him get away so easy. As a political manoeuvre, however, the term successful mast be used going to let him get away so easy, advisedly. Sir Adam Beck didn't find mingled with the guests on the lawn.

Sir Adam Disappointed. When Sir Adam finally did have his chance on the balcony he adsays Mrs. Jenny Evans of Detroit, and come under the health until we lose it. Mrs. Evans worked in a factory, but owing to a weakness and pains in her back she was forced to give up work. She says: "A friend recommended Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, fortunate—for him at least. He had and it made me well. It "grand to spent 12 hours, he said, preparing those lines as he added, "that he trusts that the people would not be disturbed by what the different candidates and their supporters might have to say."

In his concluding remarks Sir Adam lauded the object of the evening's entertainment—obtaining funds for the new care. tunate this time, however, in that they for the new organ. andidates from whom to select one

Miss Armstrong Well Received. Miss Armstrong was particularly well received, and her address while orief, and strictly non-political, and confined to church and musical activities of London, was listened to with rapt attention and drew unstinted applause.

"With all these candidates and their different platforms, one is in a quandary," he explained, "to define just what line of action will please the majority of the people, and I must hear first from my opponents as to what they propose to do if

Then Sir Adam pleaded for a cam-nen sir Adam pleaded for a cam-paign without personalities. "I hope that this campaign will be outstand-ing," he said, "from bitterness and personalities that have featured other events. Let us have clear-cut issues.

But Sir Adam apparently doesn't expect that the candidates will be able to continue the campaign along those lines as he added, that he mained at home because none of the candidates have appealed to them. Now they have the excuse handy. You have all sorts of piatforms, wet, dry, and both sexes.'"

Sir Adam paid his respects to Miss Armstrong, and offered the suggestion that her entrance in the field would have a delightful effect upon the campaign.

"And there is my old opponent, Dr. Stevenson," he commented. "He is always polite, polished and eloquent. And then we have another candidate. I don't know who he represents—probably liberty, even if it is the Liberty League. And then there is myself. Sometimes the people think a lot about me and sometimes they don't."

Dr. Stevenson was not going to be put off with any warnings about "no politics." Not him. Sir Adam could do as he pleased, but Dr. Stevenson felt impelled to refer to the record of the Drury administration, and dwelt at considerable length upon certain of the "44 legislative reasons why the Farmer-Labor government should be returned to office."

"The people are still worshipping the silver god even as they did in the old days," Dr. Stevenson explain-ed, "and this is what the Drury gov-ernment has been trying to eliminate from the minds of men." Referring to the mothers' pensions, workmen's compensation act and similar legislation, Dr. Stevenson wanted to know the real value of churches if men were not paid ade-quately in order that their children quately in order that their children might be clothed properly, educated and safeguarded against disease.

"We have gone into the timber limits, and to the mine-owners and to the race-tracks," he explained, "and made all these people contribute their financial share as well. We have given 44 acts of legislation, and all you need is another his four years." all you need is another big four years of the present government." "We must protect and develop our boundless natural resources. If we do not do this and there is nothing coming from our valuable resources where are we going to get the money? We will face a direct taxation."

The last speaker of the evening was U. A. Buchner, who, while nominated at the Liberal convention, subsequently withdrew. Mr. Buchner paid his respects to the various candidates in a brief address and chided Dr. Stevenson. "I was amused at him." he confided, "I was surprised to hear that he has become such a devout churchman. It was the first I knew of it, and I don't want him to forget it if he goes to Toronto, as he seems confident that he will." Everyone appreciated that Mr. Buchner was having a little joke with the Labor nominee.

The gathering was voted a huge success, and Miss Armstrong found occasion to refer appropriately to the efforts of the hostess, Mrs.
