Under the guidance of a brilliant opportunist the Liberal party can never model the future of Canada in any great national mould, and in succession to its present leader, one can see nothing in store for the Liberal party except opportunism with the brilliancy rubbed off. The root of the matter lies in the Conservative party, but it is like those grains of seed which have been imprisoned for thousands of years in the mausoleum of a dead king, before it will blossom and sport it must be planted in the root of the guidance of a brilliant opportunism. Which is a national need, will grow a national policy as that they would be aiming at production, and their capital would not be dead after it was invested in copper deposits. When all the copper deposits of British and their capital would not be dead after it was invested in copper deposits. When all the copper deposits of British and their capital would not be dead after it was invested in copper deposits. When all the copper deposits of British and Australasia are appropriated by private owners, a copper monopoly may become a possibility of a breach of the Law in that your half their capital would not be dead after it was invested in copper deposits. the Liberal government remains protecthe Liberal government remains protec-tionist in practice it will be a little difmicult to stir up the ordinary believers in protection to support another party and the resolute co-operation of all hon merely because it is protectionist in principle as well. But in the question of transportation, of railway develop-ent, the whole of Canada is vitally in rested. A railway man, in speaking of the transportation question, compared Canada to a hopper with too small a spout. We should prefer to compare it to a bottle with too small a neck, and the neck we should describe as the railway facilities between the West and the Atlantic seaboard. These railway facilities must be improved and the Grand Trunk Pacific scheme is one a refusal to assist any railroad construction in any way whatever. In our point on third course would only be party who are always drawing attention to the strength and length of last year's straw, instead of busying themselves with the planting of this year's seed. The Conservative party in Canada reaped a great harvest. It became the vehicle through which an immense and glorious aspiration of national development was realized in concrete form. But Canada has just as great and just as glorious aspirations after national development today are it ever had in the past, formless heavings and pulsarious of destiny, requiring only the hand of genius, imaginative foresight, and statesmanlike grasp, to bring about a new and greater epoch of our history. Under the guilance of a brilliant opport. The construction in any way whatever. In our struction in any way whatever. So much by way of a start. Then it might go on to "resolutely co-operate with honest men in both parties to secure the cutting off of the personator and the briber."

After this it might venture on "the casting out of such politicians as encourage or defend improper practices in their own elections," and all this, not withstanding anything in the criminal code against the crime of suicide.
