PREFER NEW BRUNSWICK AFTER LIVING IN THE WEST.

Three Farmers Among Recent Arrivals Buy Farms and Will Settle in Province.

A new immigration movement has been inaugurated—a migration of farmers from the northwest to the little old Province of New Brunswick. These farmers have recently forsaken the west for the east, evidently having come to the conclusion that opportunities in New Brunswick are better than in other parts of Canada. Clement C. Carter, an English farmer, who has spent some time in the west, came to New Brunswick the other day, and after taking stock of conditions, purchased the well-known potato farm of McQuar Brothers, at Burton, Sunbury County.

R. E. Young, a farmer who spent six or seven years in the west, has purchased a farm near Fredericton Junction, Wm. Ashman, another farmer, who has had considerable experience in the west, went down to Grand Manan a few weeks ago, and has decided to locate there.

"That experienced farmers should see greater opportunities in New Brunswick than in the northwest, and decide to locate here does not surprise me," said W. W. Hutbasd, secretary of Agriculture, yesterday. "At the recent convention of the Farmers' and Dairymen's Association at Fredericton, Prof. Cummings and Dr. Standish, of the Truro Agriculture College, told the farmers that the soil of many parts of the Maritime Provinces was just as good as that of the west, and more suitable for raising a variety of crops, while other conditions, such as proximity to markets and the cost of labor were more favorable to successful farming. They added, however, that we were only learning the ABC of agriculture. "There is no doubt that there is a great future for farming in this province, and the fact that farmers are coming from the west should encourage our own people to make greater efforts to realize their opportunities."
