

one of the Iron Chancellor Bismarck, just restored to imperial favour, the founder and builder of the German Empire. The striking personality of these rugged chieftains, their great skill in war, diplomacy and statecraft, form a historic story of surpassing interest and importance. A sketch, from personal acquaintance, by Bayard Taylor, and Bismarck's witty and persuasive review of his own career, which carried the Reichstag for national defence, are added. Two strong portraits are given.

Her Majesty's Tower. By WILLIAM HERWORTH DIXON, from the seventh London edition. Two volumes. Octavo, pp. x.-359; viii.-391. Price, $2.50.

He who knows the story of the Tower of London, knows in large part the history of Great Britain. Its greatest heroes, its noblest deeds, its most tragic and pathetic episodes are all intimately associated with that grim old tower beside the Thames. It is the oldest historic tower in Europe, going back to the time of the Cæsars. Beside it, all other palaces and prisons appear like things of yesterday. It colours Shakespeare's page and casts gloom over Bacon's story. Within its cells were written Raleigh's History of the World, Elliot's Monarchy of Man, Penn's "No Cross, No Crown," and other famous books. Memories of Lady Jane Grey, Anne Boleyn, Queen Elizabeth, Fisher, More, Cromwell, Sir John Oldcastle, Somerset, Dudley, Strafford, Vane, Lord Lovat, Russell, and many more of England's princes, warriors, statesmen and nobles, haunt, like ghosts, the old tower.

No man has so studied the stirring story of the Tower, with its historic truth stranger than poet's fiction, so thoroughly as Mr. Dixon, or recounted them with such dramatic vividness and fascinating style. This book has been heretofore out of reach of many from its high price. It is now offered in two handsome volumes, library style, gilt top, for the very low price of $2.50. A great historical work like this, without an index, is like a knife without a handle—very difficult to use. The admirable index to these volumes, of nearly fifty pages, is one of the best we have ever seen.

The Wesleyan Methodist Magazine.
Edited by THE REV. W. L. WATKINSON. New series.

This venerable Magazine, begun by John Wesley 116 years ago, is renewing its youth in this new series. It has an enlarged page, printed in larger and more open type than heretofore, is handsomely illustrated and has a thoroughly modern appearance. It has among its contents, papers on science, short stories, critical articles, sketches of travel and the like. Some objection has been made to incorporating in this magazine the Missionary Notices. We think that a criticism ill-founded. No part should be more interesting than those letters from the high places of the field, and articles on missionary topics. These should be well illustrated and will, doubtless, be helpful to the cause of missions and to the piety of the Methodist people. When Methodism ceases to be a missionary Church, its glory will have departed. By all means give the people plenty of information of the heroism of modern missions!

A Romance of Skye. By MAGGIE MACLEAN. Illustrations by Lockhart Bogle. Edinburgh and London: Oliphant, Anderson & Ferris. Toronto: William Briggs. Price, $1.75.

This story takes us back to the troublous times of the two Scottish risings of 1715 and 1745. It is full of stirring incident, of conflict with targe and claymore, and perilous escapes by flood and field. The fealty of the clans to the chieftain and of chief to the clan are well illustrated. A vein of tender romance softens the sternness of the picture, and the deathless hope of the dying Christian glorifies the whole.
