

before been found, to show that they knew God would send rain in days to come for their fruit and corn, and to show that they knew God would send the Holy Spirit to them as gladly as he does rain.

When Jesus saw the water it made him think how much the people like water. They like it so much that they have to drink it many times a day. [Draw out the children on this point. Also speak of God's ample provision for supplying our physical thirst.] Then he began to think that people needed to be made good more than they needed water. No one but Jesus can make people good, so he stood up where all could see him [step upon the platform or some elevation] and said, "If any man thirst, let him come unto me and drink." He did not mean for them to drink water. He had no water for them there. It was the priest who had the water; but he meant that he would give them goodness, and this would make them feel as nice as a drink did.

Jesus told the people many other things. He said he had told them what God had told him to, and if they would do as he wanted them to, they would know that his words came from God. He said that God had sent him to them, and that he was soon going back to heaven, but some of them could not go and find him there, for they were wicked men. These men were wicked because they said that Jesus was not the God-man the Bible had said was to come, and because they tried to keep him from preaching. But some of the people there were good, and said that Jesus was the God-man. The Jews knew that Jesus had never been to one of the schools to which men go to learn how to preach, and they asked how he could preach so well, having never learned how to do so. How could he? That is right; God told him what to say.
