What is called hegemony, or political ascendency, is an empty thing in itself and cannot last long unless there are enduring and humanitarian conceptions of life and government behind the outward show. This is a point which Germany has never apparently been able to grasp. Content with the appearance of outward power, Germany has lost the real key to power.

The majesty of the truth in The Punch cartoon of King Albert answering the kaiser, who taunted him with having lost all, has never impressed itself upon the German mind, which is thereby demonstrated to be material in its outlook. ' The Germans might conquer the outside of the world, but they could never conquer its soul. This is what makes the terms of peace so difficult to settle, for the terms are terms of the soul, tho they will have to be expressed in terms of the outer world and consciousness. The Germans and the allies are talking in different languages in this matter, and no interpreter has yet ariser between them but the sword. Will Germany be able to learn to speak a language the very alphabet of which has been obliterated from its national tablets? This is the question which must be answered before the first word of peace can be spoken. Cynics among the neutrals, and Germany herself, denounce all such talk as cant, and it is not difficult to understand why it sounds like cant lived by such standards. The south learned from the north in the Civil

The people of the south were of the same strain essentially as the north. They were good sports. When they were beaten they bore no malice. They turned to their tasks and are better and stronger today than ever.

With the Germans it is different There is more than the questions of independence and of slavery. Independence goes without saying. It is the independence of other nations, and not of Germany, that is in peril. When Germany shows any desire to observe the independence of the lesser nations the way to peace will be greatly shortened. Nor have we to stipulate that slavery shall not rule in Ger many, tho we might have something to say about slavery in the German colonies. To do them justice, we be-Heve the Germans are seized of the fact that slavery injures the slaveowner quite as much as the slave.
