A FINE DISPLAY OF PRODUCTS FROM THE WEST INDIES

C. S. Pickford Visited the Dominion Exhibition Grounds Today and Arranged for Space for the Exhibit

C. S. Pickford, of Pickford & Black, the well known shipping firm, who is in the city in the interests of West Indian industries intent on making comprehensive displays at the approaching Dominion exhibition in this city, visited the fair grounds this forenoon to make full report back to the parties he represents. Mr. Pickford was very much surprised at the magnitude of the exhibition grounds and buildings and expressed the belief that St. John possesses as fine an exposition plant as could be desired. It is far beyond the provincial class of fair and truly national in extent of structural and outdoor facilities. With reference to the West Indian exhibit at the Dominion, show Mr. Pickford has informed Manager Good that the following islands will contribute towards the extensive display: Barbados, Demerara, Trinidad, Jamaica, Montserrat, Dominica, and possibly Bonaire. The collection of products will be comprehensive including a wide variety, a chief feature of which will be fruits, fresh and preserved, also coffee, Java, cocoa, coffee, fabric and straw goods; products from the famous pitch lakes of Trinidad and numerous waxes, etc., characteristic of the tropics and sub-tropics. Not the least interesting of the West Indian department which will be highly complete as well as being generally stocked, will be the fine samples of native coffee, cocoa and food.

ABOUT 700 ARE STILL RESIDING IN CAMPBELLTON

And a Great Deal Must Still be Done to Help Them Recover From the Recent Disaster—More Coming Back

While many hundreds of the victims of last week's fire at Campbellton have returned to their homes, and the destitute, poor and aged, are being cared for in other towns, some men at hand, some far away, are still about seven hundred remaining who must be cared for by their neighbors in the outer world until they are in a position to shift for themselves. At present they are unable to do this in the ruined town, because, for the most part, their occupations have been taken from them, by the merciless flames, and they are being engaged in the work of relieving themselves and their unfortunate companions with the aid of those who have done good to their benefit. Most of the seven hundred or more people who yet remain in Campbellton are gathered together for warmth and protection in the tented village behind the town and it is here that the relief work is being attended to, scores of men and women assisting with might and main, and ready willing spirits, in the uplifting of themselves and their children from their present miserable condition. In trams, boats, wagons and other conveyances, are being sent on foot, hundreds of the destitute ones fled from the path of the terrifying flames on the night of the fire, but each day now sees great numbers of them returning to stare anew in the battle of life upon the sites of their former cozy dwellings. The population of the devastated town is being increased every day. From the arrival of many outside agents or merchants visiting the place from a business point of view. In this way the inhabitants of the fire swept town are rapidly swelling in numbers, and they will, before very long, be counted in thousands. This looks well for the future of the town, and it is a source of much encouragement to the few hundred who remained in town since the night of the calamity, as it strengthens their belief that Campbellton will rise from its ashes even more prosperous and thriving than was formerly the case. Thus, it may easily be seen, that assistance is urgently needed to keep those who are living in the ruined town, from suffering to aid them in the work of rebuilding. It is necessary that assistance in money, especially, but also provisions, clothing, and general goods, be forwarded at once to the tent dwellers who are daily increasing in numbers, making more mouths to feed from the general supply shed, and more bodies to clothe from the none too plentiful stock.

WILD RUNAWAY IN NORTH END

Driver Kincaid Thrown from Sloven and Badly Bruised—A Bad Mix-up

Pedestrians about Indiantown scampered in all directions for shelter about 9 o'clock this morning as a large truck horse with heavy sloven attached dashed along the street down Indiantown hill at a terrific rate altogether out of the control of the driver, who had fallen forward and was hanging to the whistle-tree on the shafts. The predicament of the unfortunate man and the shudder of the big sloop caused excitement to run high for a while. All looked to see horse, wagon and man go over the wharf, but the latter was thrown violently to the pavement about half way down the hill, as the animal, near the wharf, turned quickly and attempted to pass by the fountain. The hind wheel, however, struck with great force, demolishing the wheel completely. Dragging the wagon on three wheels the now terrified horse rushed in the midst of a score of grocery wagons, slovens, etc., at the Star Line warehouse, striking the light delivery wagon of E. A. Goodwin, the fruit merchant, and smashing the shafts and ripping the harness. At this stage his wild career was checked by a number of men about the shed. Other than the broken wheel of the sloven there was no damage to horse or wagon. The driver was picked up and carried to Pidgeon's store. He was badly bruised and cut in a number of places, but was able to walk to an express wagon and was conveyed to his home. The team was one of the delivery slovens of F. Walsh & Co., Broad street, and was driven by Stewart Kincaid, of 153 Millingville avenue. The horse took flight near the car sheds from a slight collision between the sloven and a car. The horse is a big animal, of about 1,400 pounds. The ferry steamer Ludlow, which has been off the route for some time undergoing an extensive overhauling and repairing, went on the service again today, replacing the Western Extension.
