that she could sit under her own vine rad ig tree and be beholden to no man.

She aiready owned a couple of lots, and, although the weather at the time was cool, she started operations. She planned out the whole arrangement and architecture herself, figuring out the amount of lumber required, then went to the raill and gave her order. The timber cost about $175. She commenced to build on the 30th day of December, and in six days had the framework up and ready for the shingles. On New Year's Day she accompished a great day's work, starting at daybreak and continuing until dark. On the 20th day of January she moved in and took possession.

The house contains two comfortable rooms downstairs and a small bedroom upstairs. It has a front and side entrance, with walks leading to each. Since finishing the house she has added a convenient kitchen, furnished and comfortably fitted inside. She has also built a commedious henhouse at the rear end of the lot, with a convenient run-way, and it contains a nur ber of fine poultry.

Mrs. McNell, who is about ferty-sight years of age, has a fence around the whole property, and intends to build another cottage and become a 'indiady. The photograph of the woman who built her own house from cellar to roof was sent to King George, and the King's reply, togethed with a duplicate of the photograph forwarded to Buckingham Palace, has been mounted and framed, and not take twice the value for it.—Ottawa Citizen.

J. R. R. and the Fruit.

John Ross Robertson, editor and proprietor of The Toronto Telegram, who might almost class himself as one of Toronto's landmarks, is the subject of a little aneedote concerning the youthful tendency to taste the sweetness of forbidden fruit.

The late Alexander McDonald, who at the time of his death was register of deeds at Osgoode Hall, owned in orchard in the olden days, bounded by John, Richmond, Duncan and Adelaide streets. This was noted for its fine fruit and, incidentally, for many invasions of it by youths of the city.

its me fruit and, incidentally, for many invasions of it by youths of the city.

A few years ago Mr. Robertson's lawyer was negotiating with Mr. MacDonald for a piece of property and remarked to the owner that he probably knew the purchaser, who is an old resident of the city."

"Oh, yes," said Mr. McDonald, "ask him if he remembers the time I chased him out of my orchard to his home in Simcoe street and caught him, too."

they expect to finish it?" Mullin thought in a few weeks.
"And how much will it cost?"
"About $500."
"Then I'm glad to hear that," concluded Mitchell. "In fact, I'm immensely pleased. For at that rate it may yet cost them more than it's costing me now," — Toronto Star Weekly.

Church Founded by Escaped Slaves.

A few days age the Chestnut Street British Methodist Episcopal Church of Toronto, founded fifty-seven years ago by escaped slaves from the South-(a States, observed its anniversary. Only one of the church's founders was present, Mrs. Sarah Wilson, of 109 Rose averue, who has reached the mineties in age, and who came to Toronto by the "underground"—smuggled into Canada with her husband by the abolitionists before the slaves were freed in the States, as it was called at first.

Albert C. Jackson, a Toronto postms., while not a founder of the church, is one of its oldest members. As a baby, he was brought by his mother, under the protection of abolitionists, to Canada.

The church has seventy members and is free from debt. It stands on a valuable piece of land first bought from John Beverly Robinson for $200.

Bernard Mullin, official stenographer in Hull and County of Ottawa courts, once worked as a journalist on an Ottawa newspaper when reporters were paid space rates.

One day Mullin wrote that a new wharf was to be built on the Ottawa river. Next day he announced that the plans for the work (which amounted to the big expenditure of a few bundred dollars) were ready. Then followed a story as to the first load of material arriving. The wharf came into the limelight again when Mullin wrote that the men had started work.

A CREED

Let me-be brave,
And face the night,
And bear my portion
Of the fight
With courage, not
That I may be Accounted great
In victory,
But that another
Treading on
May still keep heart
When hope seems goe

Grant to me wisdom,
Not that I
May piese as one
Who's clambered high,
And count myself
Superior clay
To those less learned.
God. I pray
For Wisdom and
A clearer mind,
To add the ones
Who come behind.

Let me be strong
And brave of heart,
And teach me
How to play my part
As one who tolls
Not just for gold;

Not just for gold
Thus I'd not have
My history told;
But let me serve,
As best I can,
My God, my home,
My fellow-man.

"We had a row," admitted the trader. "It's been a long time working out, and last night it came to a head."

"Lord—ee! And to think of Ben Stark bein' licked! Why, the whole camp's talkin' about it! They say he emptied two six shooters at you, but you kept a comin', and when you did get to arm you just can be your initials on him like he was a baskwood tree. Say, John, he's a goner, sure."

"Do you mean he's—passing out?"

"Oh, no. I reckon he'll get well, from what I hear, though he won't let nobody come near him except old Doc. nobody come near him except old Doc.
But he's lost a battle, and that ends him. Don't you savry? Whenever a killer quits second best it breaks his hoodoo. Why, there's been men layin'
for him these twenty years from here to the Rio Grande, and every feller he ever bested will hear of this and begin to grease his holster; then the first will spit in his eye just to make a name for himself. No, sir! He's a spent shell. He's got to fight all his battles over again, and this time the other feller will open the ball. Oh, I've seen it happen before. You killed him last night, just as sure as if you'd hung up his hide to dry, and he knows the defensive. "I had to do it."

"I know! I know! There was witnesses. This dressmaker at the fort seen it, so I hear."
The other acquiesced silently.

"Well, well! Ben Stark licked! I can't get over that. It must 'a' been somethin' powerful strong to make you do it, John." When the old man vouchsafed no more than a nod to a question the prospector inquired:
"Where's Poleon? I've got news for him from the creek."
"I don't know. Why?"

"His laymen have give up. They've crosseut his ground, and the pay ain't there, so they've quit work for good."
"He drew a blank, ch?"

"Worse'n that—three of them. The creek is spotteder than a leopard. Runnion's men, for instance, are into it bigger than a house, while Poleon's people can't raise a color. I call it tough luck—yes, worse'n tough. It's hard blied and pickled. To them as has shall it be given and to them as hasn't shall be took even what they ain't got, as the poet says. Look at Necia! She'll be richer than a cream puff. Guess I'll step around and see

"Gone! Where?"
"Up river with Runnion. They got her away from me last night."
"Sufferin' snakes!" cjaculated Lee. "So that's why!" Then he added simply, "Let's go and git her, John."
The trader looked at him queerly.
"Maybe I won't—on the first boat! I'm seating my heart out hour by hour waiting. waiting waiting. waiting-waiting-waiting for some kind of a craft to come, and so is Bur-

"What's he got to de with it?" said the one eyed miner jealously. "Can't you and me bring her heak?"

"He'll marry her! God, won't there never be a boat?"

For the hundredth time that morning he went to the door of the post and strained his eyes downstream.

"Well, well! Them two gon' to be married," said Lee. "Stark licked, and Necia goin' to be married—all at once. I hate to see it, John. He sin't good snough. She could 'n' done a heap better. There's a lot of rag'iar men around here, and she could 'n' had her pick. Of course, always bein' broke like a dog myself, I sin't kept up my personal appearance like I ought, but I've got some

"He's a good man," said Gale, "better than you or me, and he's all torn up over this. I never saw a man act so. When he learned about it I thought he'd po mad. He's haunted the river bank ever since, raging about for some means of following her, and if I hadn't fatry held him-he'd have set out single handed."

While they were talking Burrell came in, and "No Creek" saw that the night had affected the youth even more than it had Gale, or at least he showed the marks more plainty, for his face was drawn, his eyes were sunken as if from hunger, and his whole body seemed to have fallen away till his uniform hung upon him loose, unkempt uniform hung upon him loose, unkempt and careless.

"I can't walt much longer," said Bursell and sank weerly into a seat. Almost the next instant he was on his feet again, saying to the trader, as he had said it a score of times already: "Runnion-comes to me, Gale! You understand he's mine, don't you?"

The old man nodded. "Yes; you can take him?"

take him."

"Well, who do Lgit?" asked Lee.

"You can't come along," the trader said. "We may have to follow the hound clean to the States. Think of your mine."

"To biases with the mine?" exploded the sheavy prospector. "Leeckon I'm. the shaggy prespector. "L'reckon I'm kind of a daddy to your gal, and I'm goin' to be in at the finish."

Suddenly the lieutenant uttered a cry, and with a bound Gale was besid "Look! Over-the point! Down yonder! I saw smoke?"

The three stared at the distant forest fringe that masked the bend-of the river until their eyes-ached. "You're tired, my boy," said Gale.

"Wait."
He obeyed and finally over the treebos saw a faint streamer of black.

"It is! It is?" cried the soldier.

"Th going for my war beg." And before the steemboat had hove into sight he was back with his scenty bundle of baggage, behaving like one dart, talking and laughing and runding here and there. Lee watched which he made Burrell drink. To Gale

he whispered a moment later:

"Keep-your eye on him, John. He'll go mad at this rate."

They waited, it seemed interminably,
until at last a white hull slowly rounded the point, then shaped a course across the current toward the other bank, where the water was less swift.

'As it came fully into sight Gale swore aloud in despair:

"As it came fully into sight Gale swore about in despair:

"It's the mission boat!"

"We'll, what of that?" said Burrell.

"We'll hips it—buy it—take it?"

"It's no use. She sin't got but three doe power to her engines," Lee explained. "She's a down river boat—has to sun with the current to move."

"We can't use her," Gale gave in re-inchantly, "She'd only lose time for us. We've got to wait for one of the A. C. boats."

"Wait!" cried Burrell. "We've done

It was little Johnny Gale who first saw Necta and Poleon on board, for he had recognized Father Barnum's craft at a distance and stationed himself at the bank hand in hand with Molly to bid the good, kind old man welcome. The men inside the house did not the men inside the house did not hear the boy crying Necia's name, for his voice was small, and they had gone to the rear of the store.
"Understand? You leave Runnion to me," Burrell was saying. "No man shall liky hands on him except me." His voice trailed away. He rose slow-ty to his feet, a strange light on his face. The others turned to see what aight had drawn his eyes. In the Gale caught her a way from hims then and buried her in his arms.

A woman came running into the store and, seeing the group, paused at the door—a shapeless, silent, shawled figure in silhouette against the day. The trader brought the girl to her foster mother, who began to talk in her own tongue with a rapidity none of them had ever heard before, her voice as tender as some wild bird's song. Then the two women went away together around the store into the house, Poleon had told Necla. all the amazing story that had come to him that direful night, all that he had overheard, all that he knew and much that he guessed.

The priest came into the store shortly, and the men fell upon him for information, for nothing was to be gained from Poleon, who seemed strangely fagged and weary and who had said but little.

"Yes, yes, yes?" laughed Father Barnum. "Til tell you all I know, of course, but first I must meet Lieutenant Burrell and take him by the hand."

The story did not lose in his telling, particularly when he came to describe the fight on the gravel bar which no man flad seen and of which Poleon had told him little, but the good priest was of a militant turn, and his blue eyes gifttered and flashed like an old crusader's.
