BOLINDER'S

DIRECT REVERSIBLE CRUDE OIL ENGINES.

First in 1893 Foremost in 1914
Built in sizes from 5 B.H.P. up to 320 B.H.P.

Nearly 100 vessels fitted with Bolinder's Engines for towage in the British Isles, the object of Messrs. Bolinder's design being for large Propellers at low revolutions and consequent efficiency. As an example mention might be made of the "MIRI" (160 B.H.P.) which tows regularly at Sea a 1500 Ton Tank Barge.

The Bolinder will run light indefinitely without any load whatever, and without any recourse to the Blow-lamps.

The Bolinder will run at any load down to a speed which only enables the engine to just turn over, this manoeuvring is carried out by a special device which entirely does away with the necessity for the Blow-lamps.

Bolinder Engines reverse in under 3 seconds—according to the power of the engine—and what is more reverse without a failure and without a strain on the crankshaft.

SAW THE STARK HORRORS OF WAR

Newspaper Man Tells of Terrible Sights Witnessed In Louvain

THE first journalist who has been able to penetrate to Termonde since the occupation by the Germans writes that near Termonde the smoke was so dense that the range of vision was very short. In three burned out streets he traversed there was a horrible smell of burning flesh.

On the roadways were many bodies of civilians and Belgian and French soldiers, many of them decomposing, with the hands still grasping weapons. The Germans had not gathered the rifles, swords, and pistols which were strewn about.

Thought He Was Lost.

While groping his way through the smoke he was startled by the noise of a falling wall, and almost immediately he heard musketry fire on all sides. He gave himself up for lost, as soldiers approached him with fingers on the triggers of their rifles.

An officer demanded what he was doing there. The journalist replied that he was on his way to look for some friends in the neighborhood of Antwerp. He was told that he would not be made a prisoner, but that the road was hopeless.

He saw afterwards that, as in Louvain, the Germans had wrecked the best part of the town, and that the river and railway bridges had been destroyed.

Nauseated by what he had seen, he was making his way out, when through the smoke there came again the patrol that he had first seen.

They had two prisoners, who, Germans said, had been looting, and were about to be shot. The prisoners declared they had only gone to their ruined homes to try to save some of their possessions.

VOLUNTEERS VISIT HOMES

Catalina Lads Take Run To See Old Folks

Catalina, Sept. 30.—The weather has been very stormy lately which means a poor fall fishery. In fact since the traps were taken up very little has been done owing to the scarcity of bait; on the whole the fishery is very much behind last year.

The sch. Lizzie, Skipper Matthew Mason, hailing for 40 qts. fish arrived from the French Shore on Saturday night just in time to escape the storm, which prevailed Saturday night and Sunday.

Capt. Louis Little in the sch. Nellie R. also arrived here on Saturday night with considerable freight for the Union store. Business has been pretty brisk here lately; the clerks being kept continually on the move.

The train arrived yesterday about two hours behind time. By her came our brave volunteer lads to see the old folks and last but not least, their old girls.

The Volunteers who came home yesterday will be leaving again by tonight's train. We trust, however, that the war will soon be ended, and the services of our brave lads won't be required.

The Rev. W. Bugden and J. G. Stone, M.H.A., will also be going by tonight's train as far as Port Rexton.

"WARFARE" AS GERMANS CARRY IT ON

Men Buried Alive—Harmless Women Terrorised To Death

ROBBED BABIES OF THEIR MILK

Shot Mother in Bed With New Born Babe—Infant Killed

AT Bucken several wounded soldiers were buried alive because they would not reveal in what direction their comrades had retired. The villagers, after the Germans had gone, heard the cries of some half-buried men, and went to relieve them. Near this place also a woman was bayoneted.

Near Louvain the Catholic priest gathered all the women and children and non-combatants into the church and his own house. Then he went out to meet the German troops and told them what he had done, and gave his word for it that there would be no act of militancy on the part of any member of his flock.

The German officers appeared to think this was amusing, and declared that nevertheless they intended "to make an example" to ensure their own security while in the village that night. With that they ordered ten of the men in the sacristy to be brought out to be shot.

Women Scared to Death

When the wretched men were brought out they were told to run as fast as they could, and the German officers and men fired over their heads into the air. The sound of the firing so terrorised those in the church, who thought that the executions had been carried out, that some of them became frenzied with fear, and one woman died on the spot.

At Jette the Germans demanded the whole of the milk supply, and refused to allow some of it to be retained for the use of the children. What they did not themselves use they gave to their horses, saying "Belgian pigs are not worthy of drink milk."

The burgomaster of Jette had collected all the odd arms of the inhabitants in the Weal Hall. This he pointed out to the German officers, and asked them for a receipt.

They tore down the Belgian flag, and one after another spat upon it.

Terrible Barbarity

At Malines a civilian declined to give up his revolver and "trust the Germans," saying that he must keep his weapon to protect his wife and newly-born child.

When the Germans came along he barricaded himself in his house and defied them. In the struggle that ensued he fired off six shots, probably accounting for as many Germans at close range, and was himself shot dead with dozens of bullets.

Not content with this reprisal, the Germans entered the upper rooms of the house, where they shot the man's wife. One of the soldiers threw the newly-born child out of the window, and it was caught on a bayonet.

Near Malines a Belgian lad was found. He was probably looking for his dead father. The Germans there upon tied the boy up to the corpses of two dead men. He remained in this horrible position for two and a half days until extricated.

These are stories which are told by refugees, and for which, with names, places, and other data, they are prepared to vouch. It gives just a glimpse of warfare as carried on by the Kaiser's troops.

GERMANS SHELL STABLE OF SCOTS

But the Plucky Soldiers Tried To Rescue The Horses

Private Kay, 2nd Scots Greys, writing to his employer at Richmond, says I had a very narrow escape in Wednesday's battle near Mons, as I was with the transport and was twice surrounded. We were shelled for three hours. Off went the roof, and at last a shell exploded and set fire to the stables. We had about twenty-two horses and all the transport in the yard. We hung on for orders to remove the horses. None came.

At last a shell came like a thunder-bolt, struck the wall and down came half the stables. As we retired another shell came, and then I got wounded—smashed the butt of my rifle and sent me silly for five minutes.

Saved the Horses.

Then I heard a major say: "For yourselves, boys." I was told to go back and cut the horses loose, and did so. Then I had strength enough to run through a line of rifle fire over a barbed wire covered by a hedge, and managed to get out of rifle range. Then I fell for want of water I just had about two teaspoonfuls in my bottle. I went on, struggling my way through hedges, to a railway line.

When I got through I saw an awful sight; a man of the Royal Irish with six wounds from shrapnel. He called to me for water, but I had none. I managed to carry him half a mile and found water; then he was happy.

Kay remained with the man, carrying him over turnip fields until he met some more men. They then got a door and carried the wounded man on it. Kay left him at a Frenchman's house, and, with some fifteen other soldiers, tramped sixty-three miles—nearly all on one foot, as he was wounded in the heel—until they fell in with a field hospital.

WAR POPULAR WITH RUSSIANS

Delighted Over Chance to Humiliate the Kaiser

Interesting information concerning the mobilisation of the Russia forces in the early stages of the war and of the condition of things generally in the Tsar's empire was given to a Daily Telegraph representative by a gentleman who has large trading interests in Russia and has just returned to London after an exciting journey.

"I have been in Russia between three and four years," he observed, "and have recently been staying at Saratoff. About the time the war broke out I was going to Smolensk on business, and arrived at Moscow the day war was declared between England and Germany. The Russians were tremendously jubilant. In the Tverskaya, which is the Piccadilly of Moscow, there were processions of singing and shouting townspeople, and every Englishman was cheered.

"Now we are going to wipe the Germans out," was the most general observation. "They are settled on the sea, and we will settle them on the land," seems to sum up all they had to say on the matter, and their keenness to 'get to work' at the business of fighting the Germans was simply wonderful.

"Nothing like it was seen in the early stages of the Japanese war. Then the men did not know what they were to fight for, and did not want to go, but on this occasion every man who was called to the Colours was eagerly anxious to go, and this accounted for the remarkably rapid progress of the mobilisation.

"Those who had to go to the war wanted to, and their friends and relatives were equally anxious that they should do so. This popularity of the war is the great reason, combined with good generalship, of course, of their success so far, and everybody in Russia is confident that her soldiers will soon be in Berlin."
