This is no longer a commercial appeal. It is the rallying cry of combatants fired with imperial and national patriotism. We must furnish Britain and our friends at war with food and supplies. More land should be brought under cultivation, and part of our ur-ban population transferred to the task of bringing wealth out of the soil. The money received for our products will go far to provide for our necessities and, if wisely circulated in our own country, will alleviate distress from unmovement. This is the perfrom unemployment. CHAPTER XVI.

A State o' Maine Prophet. UMMER was dying hard, for although it had passed, by the calendar, Mother Nature was still keeping up her customary

There had been a soft rain in the night, and every spear of grass was brilliantly green and tipped with crystal. The smoke bushes in the garden plot and the asparagus bed beyond the same shadow that had followed him since early boyhood—the same shadow that had fallen across his mother's mind and left continual twilight there. them looked misty as the sun rose higher, drying the soaked earth and dripping branches. Spiders' webs, inarvels of lace, dotted the short grass under the apple tree. Every flower that had a fragrance was pouring it gratefully into the air; every bird with a leavest note in its relief cays it more than a stranger, note in its relief cays it more than a figure of the second twitted this scene to Waitstill, for he is the second twint and twint a joyous note in its voice gave it more was one of those sitting about joyous note in its voice gave it indeed to be strong about the joyously from a bursting throat, and the river laughed and rippled in the distance at the foot of Town House hill. The world was alive and so rest of the family took their pl peautiful that Waitstill felt like going down on her knees in gratitude for having been born into it and given a chance of serving it in any humble way whatsoever.

The chronicle of Jacob Cochrane career in the little villages near the Saco river has no such interest for the general reader as it had for Wah Baxter. She hung upon every that Ivory had written and real

No one really knew, it seemed, who the long table, as was the cu not only of town history, but of village matters they had supposed unkn to any one.

When the stranger had finished his supper and returned to the barroom he had to pass through a long entry, and the landlady, whispering to her daughter, said:

"Betsy, you go up to the cha closet and get the silver and bring it down. This man is going to sleep there, and I am afraid of him. I must be a fortune teller, and the Lord only knows what else!"

In going to the chamber the daughter had to pass through the barr As she was moving quietly through, hoping to escape the notice of the newcomer, he turned in his chair and, looking her full in the face, suddenly

"Madam, you needn't touch your silver. I don't want it. I am a gentle-

Whereupon the bewildered Betsy scuttled back to her mother and told her the strange guest was indeed a fortune teller.

Of Cochrane's initial appearance as a preacher Ivory had told Waitstill in their talk in the churchyard early in the summer. It was at a child's funeral that the new prophet created his first sensation, and there, too, that Aaron and Lois Boynton first came under his spell. The whole countryside had been just then wrought up to a state of religious excitement by revival meetings, and Cochrane gained the benefit of this definite preparation for his work. He claimed that all his sayings were from divine inspiration trine received direct communicati from the Almighty. He disdained formal creeds and all manner of church organizations, declaring that sectarian names were marks of the beast and all church members to be in Babylon. He introduced rebaptism as a symbolic cleansing from sectarian stains, and after some months advanced a proposition that his flock hold all things in common. He put a sudden end to the solemn "deaconing out" and droning of psalm tunes and grafted on to his form of worship lively singing and marching, accompanied by clapping of hands and whirling in circles, during the progress of which the most hysterical converts or the most fully "Cochranized" would swoon upon the floor, or, in obeying their leader's instructions to "become as little children," would sometimes go through the most extraordinary and unmeaning

It was not until he had converted hundreds to the new faith that he added more startling revelations to his gospel. He was in turn bold, mystical, eloquent, audacious, persuasive, auto cratic, and even when his self styled "communications from the Almighty" controverted all that his hearers had formerly held to be right, he still magnetized or hypnotized them into an unwilling assent to his beliefs. There was finally a proclamation to the effect that marriage vows were to be annulled when advisable and that complete spiritual liberty was to follow; a liberty in which a new affinity might be sought and a spiritual union begun upon earth, a union as nearly approximate to God's standards as faulty human beings could manage to attain.

(To be Continued.) The body of a sailor, believed to have been lost in the Lake gale of last November, was ashore at Port Franks.
