CUNARD LINE STEAMER SUNK IN THE ENGLISH German Submarine Raider U-53 Now Believed to Have Been Sunk

U-53, GERMAN SUBMARINE RAIDER IS BELIEVED SUNK

Report of Submersible Off Atlantic Coast Having Been Destroyed; May be German War Submarine; Believed That Lloyd's Agency Knew of Its Destruction

New York, Oct. 19 .- A News Agency despatch from Norfolk,

A German submarine, probably U-53, has been sunk off Nantucket, according to a signal from a British cruiser to the British steamer North Pacific taking on bunker coal here to-day. The message read: "German submarine sunk east of Nan-

Officers of the North Pacific said the cruiser was lying off the

A London cable a few days ago said a sudden reduction in insurance rates on Transatlantic shipping by Lloyds had, aroused speculation as to whether the U-53 had been sunk, captured or had returned to a German port, it being believed that the reduction was ordered because Lloyds had received "inside" information. ..

The North Pacific in Monday night from New Orleans, did not report until early to-day, and that the cruiser had signalled.

HERE IT IS: THE GREAT ARMORED "TANK" OR CATERPILLAR

An authentic picture of the famous British "tank" which crosses streams, climbs hills, leaps trenches and spits out death from rifles, machine guns and small cannon. With their increased activity on the battlefield the world has been baffled by the greatest mystery of the war, and everyone has asked, "What do they look like?" On the Somme the steel monsters have proved their worth, fairly demoralizing the Germans. The Canadians' first great offensive in Picardy was successful with the aid of the "tanks." According to the Germans five "tanks" have been destroyed on the west front.
