The Monsalvat school for the comparative study of religion at Greenacre, Eliot, Me., has closed its summer session, which is the most successful in its history.

The initial steps toward the founding of the school were taken in the summer of 1894, when the Swami Vivekananda of India was invited to conduct a class in Vedauta philosophy under the pines at Greenacre. Following him in 1895 K. Nakamura of Japan, by his class in Buddhism, and the Rev. F. Huberty James * of England (a teacher beloved of all who knew him in China as well as in Europe and America, and a martyr in 1900 to the cause to which he had Taoism and other religious systems of China, brought the Orient and the consecrated his life), by classes in Occident into still closer sympathetic touck and prepared the way for the opening of a preliminary session. the Monsalvat school in 1896. No formal organization of the school has as yet taken place, but land for a site has been offered by its founder Miss Sarah J. Farmer; the services of eminent instructors are assured and the formal work of the school will begin as soon as the money for a simple but commodious building has been donated.
