THE ZONE OF FIRE.

A Vivid Picture of a Battle on the Yeldt.

Description of Modern Warfare as it is Actual - Vagued in South Africa by the Author of "Life in the Kanks."

Our scouts having brought us intelligence that, say, a thousand Boers are occupying an entrenched position five miles to our front, the general in command will detail two British battalions, each one thousand strong, to rout them out. This, it may be explained, is in accordance with the rules governing the game—which decree that, other things being equal, the attacking force should always be at least twice the strength of the defending. With them will go a battery of field artillery and half a dozen Maxim guns.

All actions, great and small, begin with an artillery duel; and our supposition of engagement is, of course, no exception to the general rule. Now, field-artillery officers claim for their weapons an effective range of between 8,000 and 12,000 yards; but in practice, except under very exceptional circumstances, they are seldom ordered to act on before the attacking force has advanced to within about 5,000 yards of the position to be assailed. Then a single round of common—i. e., solid—shell is fired, to get the other battery followed by shrapnel at one minute intervals from right to left at the same time, the infantry, which has up to now been marching in column of company, deploys—that is, opens out.

It may be that the fire of our artillery draws that of our opponents, in which case the "artillery" companies advanced; but in any case our lines press steadily forward, rifles at the trail or slope, and ranks opened to two paces interval. One stays 600 yards in the rear, and becomes the main body of the reserves, while the other splits itself up into the "firing line," "support," and "reserves," in such a manner that the numerical strength of the last-named fighting unit is not less than that of the other two.

At about 3,000 yards the two battalions separate. RUNNINGSORE

Solid Sore from Knee to Instep. Thought have to be Amputated. Walked with Crutch. Almost Wild with Pain.

Physician Said "Never could be Cured." First CUTICURA. Sore after First Application. Cured in Eight Weeks.

I was afflicted with a terrible sore leg, caused by a cut. It became so inflamed that it was thought it would have to be amputated. My physician said that it could never be cured, and that it would remain a running sore on account of the poisonous state of my blood. When I had to get along with a crutch, I tried all kinds of blood and other medicines without success, my leg getting worse and worse. Utterly discouraged and almost wild with pain, I gave up in despair, and turned to CUTICURA. I bought a bottle, and used it as directed. I was able to sleep and to get along with a crutch. My leg was cured in eight weeks from the time I began the use of CUTICURA. My blood was purified, and my health restored. I am now well and sound.

A GOOD IMAGINATION

Had the Author of This Tale of the Turkey and the Peacock

But if True, it Certainly Goes to Prove Intelligence in Birds

"I have always believed," the colonel said, "that animals have far more intelligence than they are commonly credited with. I am sure they can talk to one another. A case in point: You see that turkey gobbler and hen out there? Let me tell you an actual fact about them. Last summer Mr. Johnson presented me with a splendid bird, and the beauty of his plumage was the wonder of the neighborhood. They were engaged for a moment in earnest conversation. Then Mr. Gobbler straightened himself up, stiffened his wings, gave a strut, and proudly spread his tail feathers. Madam gazed at him, and I could see the fire in the gobbler's eye, and told Mr. Boubel, my engineer, who was with me at the time, to look out and we would see some fun, and we did.
