New Longfellow Pronounced "Hiawatha."

"Such a confusing variance in the pronunciation of 'Hiawatha' exists both in dictionaries and in the speech of educated men and women," writes Elizabeth A. Whitey, in the Ladies' Home Journal, "that I have asked Miss Longfellow how the word is pronounced by the poet's family. She says the pronunciation which she always heard from the poet himself, is 'Hi-a-wa-tha,' the 'i' pronounced as it is in 'machine' or 'pique,' the second 'a' pronounced as it is in 'far' or in 'father.'"

Slowly Dying From Catarrh

Thousands are in this terrible condition but don't realize their danger. If you have the slightest taint of Catarrh, would it not be wise to commence Catarrh treatment now and be perfectly cured in a short time? This pleasant remedy cures without the use of drugs, atomizers or snuffs. You inhale the medicated vapor which spreads to all parts of the breathing organs, kills the germs and heals the inflamed surfaces. Catarrh cures the throat and nose instantly, and never fails to cure the most obstinate Catarrh, lung and throat troubles. A trial will demonstrate the value of Catarrh, which sells for $1, small size 25c., at Drugists or Polson & Co., Kingston, Ont.

Rape for Swine.

The value of rape as a pasture for swine is a matter of controversy among farmers who have tried it. Some say that hogs do not like it and will only eat it when especially hungry for green feed. Professor Shaw urges farmers not to give it up; the hogs will become fonder of it as time rolls round; that the same with sheep. "Those fresh from the ranges do not like rape at first, but gradually overcome this dislike, and afterward, are very fond of it."

Nervous Dyspepsia

How it shakes one up, invades sleep, destroys strength, adds a real misery to life. Not the stomach, but the nerves are affected. Starved nerves make the whole trouble. You need Ferrozone because it is a nerve food. It supplies the elements that are needed to make rich red blood. This is the savings bank of health. The richer the blood in red cells, the richer you're sure to be in health. Ferrozone quickly makes blood, strengthens the digestive system, strengthens the digestive organs and presto! the nervous disturbance disappears. Sold by McCall & Co.

Sometimes butter has white specks distributed through it. This is caused by over-sourness in the cream.

A hearty appetite does not always indicate a healthy condition. It is not the quantity of food which is eaten but the quantity which is assimilated, which determines the actual value of the food consumed. If the stomach and organs of digestion and nutrition cannot convert the food into nourishment, and into blood, then the food is an injury instead of a benefit. For all disorders of the stomach and its allied organs of digestion and nutrition, there is a certain remedy in Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It removes clogging obstructions. It strengthens the stomach, nourishes the nerves, enriches the blood and builds up the body. It is a flesh-forming, muscle-making preparation, making firm flesh instead of flabby fat. "Golden Medical Discovery" contains no alcohol, whiskey or intoxicant of any kind, and is equally free from opium, cocaine and all narcotics.

To obtain the best results in churning the cream should be only slightly sour.

MUST WAKE UP

London is Too Conservative to Keep Pace With March of Progress.

On ss. Numidian, July 18.—As at the time of sailing the date of the coronation was very problematic—it might be a matter of weeks or months—and the accident of Hon. Mr. Chamberlain had practically adjourned the coronation conference, pending his recovery, many Canadians and other colonials are winging their way homeward. On this steamer are Hon. Mr. Peters, premier of Newfoundland; Hon. Mr. Duff, finance minister of Quebec, and about 35 officers and men of the military coronation contingent had remained over. His Excellency, the Governor-General, is also booked to return with the Numidian. By the way, it is to be hoped that this more definite talk of a Canadian fast Atlantic service will result in something, because it is very humiliating to Canadian readers, who have to mark all their letters "via New York," and even to have to paralyze that route they are in a hurry, though we have the relatively shorter route of our own.

Looking back over a necessarily brief and busy visit to Great Britain, and Paris it may not be uninteresting to Canadian readers, who have not been abroad to consider in a comparative way the social and commercial conditions of Canada and the old world as it no doubt strikes the average traveler. Comparisons may be declared, but after all, they are really the only means by which we can measure ourselves and our country, and determine approximately where we stand as a people and a prospective nation. In making these comparisons I desire to throw out flank guards by admitting first of all that they are not the result of research or careful and extensive study of conditions, but only the impressions of a traveler who knows his own country fairly well and sees as much as he can in a given time of the population centers which at present the highest standards of civilization, wealth and luxury in the world. Until you have seen the best and the worst, the highest and the lowest, of any given thing you are not in a position to bracket and docket the intermediate. First of all, and without any desire to blow our own horn (for we ever were a modest people north of the Great Lakes), I do not think that the Dominion or its cities suffer in comparison with the old world. On the contrary, I do not believe there is one Canadian who will not come back better satisfied with his own country. That this is not mere patriotic prejudice and is more the fact that a warm friend of mine, an old countryman himself, but who has lived ten years or so in Canada, shares the feeling equally with us native borners, even to his own surprise, for he has many pleasant ties both in England and Scotland that should make the old land dear to him.

The ordered beauty of British agricultural landscape is oppressive to the colonial who is used to lots of room and freedom of movement; the lack of individuality, the very dogmatism, the uniformed conventionalism of the millions of human beings who are marshaled like "traffic" from the cradle to the grave through lines of directing and paternal "boards" flaring them what they must and must not do, pull on the man from the partially surveyed portions of the earth—"hobbies" and "fads" with which the driver of the penny bus steers his way through the Mississippi, of vehicles flowing down the great thoroughfares.

The colonial officers' mess room at Alexandria, Egypt, and first of all, the feel the pulse of public opinion of an evening, when a hundred or so men from all over the world discussed what they had seen and compared notes. It goes without saying that they were friendly critics, and the unanimous decision of that jury was that, in its commercial and business methods, London, is much behind the colonies and the United States, and must shake off that combination of stolidity and conceit fondly termed "conservatism," and become more wide awake and enterprising, or the progression is going to move on and leave them in the rear.

In looking about for a concrete instance that will most swiftly illustrate this "conservatism," I cannot think of anything more illuminative than the action of the same admirable police force already mentioned in protesting against having the use of the telephone thrust upon them for the good and sufficient reason that they had always got on very well without it, and they appeared to detect a slight on their efficiency as compared with a dozen generations of Scotland Yards and Bow Streeters in the mere proposal. That spirit appears to permeate the commercial official and even laboring classes of Britain to-day and to-morrow.

We have all heard a good deal about the comparative cheapness of living in Great Britain, but my experience and observation did not bear out expectations. Of course in coronation times everything might reasonably be expected to be dearer in London, but this should not have been applied to Glasgow, Edinburgh, Liverpool and other provincial cities. Hotel accommodation was as high and usually higher than the same class of accommodation with us, but I was not prepared to find the casual prices of observing prices in shop windows and what little shopping I did that miscellaneous articles are nearly, if not quite, the same prices as with us. An exception to this is the men's clothing, especially in Scotland, but in Regent street and Oxford street, London, the prices equal those of New York tailors. On the other hand food supplies and restaurant prices appeared to be as cheap or cheaper than with us, or at least of better quality for the same money—something I was also not prepared for. You could get a much better dinner for three and six in a London restaurant than you can get in most Canadian or American cities for a dollar and I must say that as a rule the food was much better cooked and better served. The same remark applies in a greater degree to Paris. Your bill for a dinner at a French restaurant, till your eyes rest on the total, because they change in centimes (one-fifth of a cent) for everything from the waiter's smile to "the little breath of air from the north," which is the Paris gentleman's name for fan when you see "poulet roti, 1.25," "salade, .50," and so on, extending down a page you prepare to go into bankruptcy until you realize that 50 centimes is 10 cents and 25 is five francs (20 cents) and 25 centimes 5 cents.

The tipping system in England is an unqualified nuisance to the stranger not on account of the expense, but from the difficulty of discounting it, and how often and how much you tip. The English blame the Americans for spoiling the servants by over tipping, but the real trouble is that unless you elaborately investigate the system the easiest way is to tip everybody in sight to the limit of your purse and then you will be sure to avoid unpleasant controversies. In Paris it is much easier because the simple rule applies that you tip everybody they look at you unpleasantly, but the tips are small. One penny and two pennies appeared to be the popular amounts. You pay your cabby and then you give him his "pourboire" of two pennies—and it doesn't matter how much you pay him, if the "pourboire" is not forthcoming he will splutter the sky with language. He is a barber shop—you pay for shave and then the barber tips a penny and the tip is a penny.

One difficulty in England is that you can never tell how high up the social scale the tips go. People, who on the west side of the water would be sure to know exactly how much to tip, would be sure to know exactly how much to tip, would be sure to know exactly how much to tip, would be sure to know exactly how much to tip.

I shrink from drawing comparisons between the girls of the several races, but it seemed to me that the most striking charms of the English girl are her complexion and her hair together with a certain debonair, that gives her a certain something, which the Scotch girl is more graceful than her Saxon sister when walking, her complexion approximates strawberries and cream rather than peaches and cream, and she has such of the sweetness and grace of the Parisian besides being prettier, and just the least taste in life of the Doric accent lends an additional charm to her remarkably sweet voice.

The Irish girl I did not properly see enough of to hazard a generalization, but those I did see, while not so demure, rather resemble their Scotch cousins, but the Scotch girl, nearer home is permissible I should say that the Canadian girl rather combines the best points of all the other girls and lends to the ensemble an individuality that is all her own. (This is on the square.) She walks better than the English girl, is nearly as neat about the feet as the French, and more stylish than the Scotch, and they wear no such style as the Parisian; nearly as vivacious as the Irish girl and with less color than the Scotch, and withal fresh, wholesome and sprightly with a deliciously independent air of being able to take care of herself, thank you!

Talking of the ladies reminds me that cigar smoking has become quite a society fad in London. Every fashionable ladies' club has a smoking room. Unfortunately I missed an opportunity of visiting one of these Adames Edens—not entirely Adames, however, for the mere Man is allowed to come in and take tea there at four in the afternoon, and some of the most exclusive Man clubs are reciprocating by opening their doors to the ladies between four and six. On the Sunday afternoon before the coronation I went with a party to one of these clubs, on Pall Mall I think it was, and we climbed out on to the seats in front erected to view the procession and spent an hour devouring muffins and tea and watching the crowd in the street below, that being one of the recognized coronation recreations.

I regret to say that when in England I failed to learn the English language. I don't mean the Cockney dialect particularly, but the ordinary language of commerce, and they did not appear to understand Canadian or American much better. This may seem strange, but it's a fact. I have gone into a store or spoken to a bus conductor, and had to make them repeat what they said twice or more before I caught the meaning. One morning a newsboy came through our camp shouting "Dyly Moll!" and after giving him a penny to say it over a few times I detected his intention of saying "Daily Mail," whereupon the small Briton became indignant and exclaimed "Blyme hif 'e don't blyve we can't apyke Hinglish!"

I may be premature in sounding the alarm, but I honestly believe that the not entirely distant future here is looming up the danger of a tremendous dual language problem.

It has nothing to do with the case, but I am just reminded of the very pretty bit of wit to the credit of that clever newspaper writer who signs herself Lally Bernard. It is too good to keep out of print. The lady's place at table on the Parisian going over was between Principal Peterson, of McGill College, and Principal Parkyn, of Upper Canada. One evening she received an invitation to a seat at what was known as "the press table," and without a moment's hesitation she sent her regrets, together with the explanation that she "could not possibly forsake her Principals, even for the honor of dining with pressmen."

Reverting to the general topic, and in summing up I may say that every Canadian who went to England this summer came back better pleased than when he left his own country. Our cities are not so large, but they make up for it in cleanliness and comfort and the blessing of easy access to fresh air and country districts free from brook-bottle-toppers, weeds and No Trespassing signs; our agricultural districts are not so garden-like, but their beauty is that of nature and there is plenty of elbow room in them and a refreshing absence from the scenery of the overcrowded congested population. We may not be so wealthy and the volume of our commerce may be as naught in comparison, but I believe we are better business people and there is a commercial alertness about us that is not so apparent in the older countries. In the individuals there is much more scope under our social conditions for initiative, originality and the cultivation of independence of action than in the thickly populated countries. These are not my own views merely, but I believe they are the views of the body of Canadians of many classes and conditions of life, the largest and most representative body, in fact, that has in any one year visited the old lands. And it appears to me a good thing to be generally known among ourselves.

E. W. B. MORRISON.

The Cause of Nervous Headache

This most distressing and common malady doubtless has its origin in some unbalanced condition of the nervous system. Probably the simplest, safest and most efficient remedy is Polson's Nerviline. Twenty drops in sweetened water gives immediate relief, and this treatment should be continued by bathing the region of the forehead with Nerviline. To say it acts quickly fails to express the result. Sold everywhere in large 25c. bottles.

The man who is always figuring where he will come in will find himself cast out at the end.

DIMINISHED VITALITY.

Some people talk very flippantly about diminished vitality. They don't stop to think that vitality is the principle of life—that it is that little understood something on which every function of their bodies depends.

Diminished vitality is early indicated by loss of appetite, strength and endurance, and Hood's Sarsaparilla is the greatest vitality.

There is a limit to the work that can be got out of a human body, or a human brain, and he is a wise man who expends no energy on pursuits for which he is not fitted.

ROYAL MUSKOKA NOW OPEN

Guests Are Arriving Daily at the New Summer Resort.

The opening of the new Royal Muskoka Hotel on Lake Rosseau, Muskoka Lakes district, for the season of 1902, has been a source of satisfaction to the proprietors, and the reservations that have been made up to the present for accommodation at this resort assures the success of the venture. Guests are arriving daily, and by next week, hundreds of people will be enjoying the beauties of Muskoka with the advantage of sojourning in one of the best summer hotels in America.

Among the guests at the hotel now are prominent people from Buffalo, Chicago, New York, and other American cities, as well as many Canadians. The Ontario Government, in conjunction with the Grand Trunk Railway, is continuing the policy inaugurated last year of restocking the Muskoka lakes with parent bass. The first carload was deposited in Lake Rosseau, June 20, and a finer lot of lake trout has seldom been seen. Last year 10,000 fish were transplanted into the Northern Lakes with much success. The fishing this year in the Muskoka Lakes is good, some excellent catches having been made, the best weighing from two to four pounds, and pickerel from two to eight pounds.

Some people never cast their bread upon the water until it is too stale for their own use.
