KEEPING THE LAW

License Commissioner R. L. Jarvis, of East Kent, was in the city this morning, and in a chat with The Planet took occasion to speak in appreciative terms of the genuine manuer in which the hotel men of East Kent had set about to "keep hotel." "Travellers tell me," he declared, "that the hotels were never equipped or kept as they are at present, and if is gratifying to know that all over the licensees are co-operating with the Commissioners to obtain a complete observance of the law. I was piete observance of the law. I was glad to see the County Judge held O'Brien to have been guiltless, bed cause we were led to understand that he was honestly endeavoring to live up to the law, and no Board of Com-missioners would want to penalize one who was keeping the law.'

MISSED CAPTUTE BY 10 MINUTES

Horse Thief was Seen by Pete Dezelia Sunday Morning, but Got Safely Away

If Dresden Police Had Telephoned a Few Minutes Sooner, Thief Would Have Been Caught -A Queer Case

Dreeden has a very queer case of horse stealing, the principal in which secaped capture by the Chatham po-lice by the small margin of ten min ates.

Last Sunday morning about one o'clock the Chief of Police of Dresden called up Chief Holmes and asked him to be on the look out for a horse thief who had stolen a three year old sorrel colt and a Milner top buggy from John Sagar, who lives about a mile north of Dresden. It was stolen about 11 o'clock Saturday nights. The Chief immediately called up the Garner House and asked the night porter to find Mr. Dezelia. Mr. Dezelia was informed of the theft and when he received the description of when he received the description of the horse and buggy he remembered seeing the outfit just ten minutes be-fore the Chief telephoned him. The driver had come from the C. P. R. station, driven down King street to the Garner House and turned down Sixth street to the Central School Sixth street to the Central School. Dezelia followed up as soon as he got the message, but the thief had got the message, but the that ago to good a start. Fete noticed that the man with the rig was medium sized, clean shaven and wore a soft hat and good clothes. He was sober, but the horse seemed to be tired out and three or four times tried to stop but was urred on by the impatient but was urged on by the impatient driver. If the Dresden police had tel-ephoned just ten minutes sooner the thief would have been caught.

This morning it was learned that the horse-minus the driver-was found early Sunday morning about three miles from Dresden by a color-ed man. It had been raining and the tracks made by the buggy were easily raced back and lost within thre riles from Chatham.

From the appearances in the case the man who stole the horse must have driven to Chatham and back again in the same night. It is thought that he either weakened after he stole the horse or that he brought some one with him to Chatham. He arrived here about one o'clock and left the C. P. R. station just as the C. P. R. express pulled out. His companion-if he had one -might have wished to board this train. If he did he was undoubtedly successful in the attempt.
