The Liberals added fifteen names to the list Friday afternoon, while the sum total of the accessions to the Conservative ranks would be well represented by a goose-egg. The Liberals appear to be away ahead in this respect. They have 244 applications for additions and their opponents only 80. The former have enrolled more than 80 names already, while the Conservatives will be fortunate if they secure half that number during the whole revision. Court resumed at 2:30 p.m. and were taken up as usual. Another of those hair-splitting technicalities so oft-recurring under this act appeared in the examination of the objections to Ed. and W. H. Shaw. They are at present drawing half the rents of certain properties in No. 3 ward. By the father's will $2,000 must be raised off the property and invested for the mother, half of the value of the remainder of the estate to go to the two sons in question. The Conservatives held that the Messrs. Shaw were not entitled to vote as owners in their own right. The Liberals the Messrs. Snawwere not entitle to vote as owners in their own right. John Bray was objected to as a tenant because last fall he lived four months with his mother-in-law. Prior to and after that he was a tenant, in all about three years. The Liberals asked Mr. Fraser to change the ground of qualification to income. He had earned over $300 in the year.

For over twenty minutes he had to stand the shelling of ting Conservative legal guns. He bore is admirably and wen the sympathy of the crowd in the ordeal. While several weeks out of regular employment he sawd wood rather than remain idle—sometimes three and sometimes four days in the week. "Now, sir, tell me how many weeks you were at it four days in the week," Porsisted Mr. Essery, so anxious was he to get the amount down fine and prove-his earnings under $300.

At this many in the audience expressed their disapproval by vigorous hissing.

Mr. Essery (excitedly)—I see lawyers here who are supposed to be gentlemen, and I see back of me men who are a disgrace to her Majesty's court. I am here as a paid counsel. I see no reason why ruffian alould interfere with a dience to order.

The injuring on Mr. Bray's income continued, and Mr. Cowan announced that it was $310 85. The Conservative saludgment reserved in order to get a minute show and the revising officer had to call the audience to order.

John Lewis, an old citizen, had waited since 10 o'clock a.m. to substantiate his right-to vote, and had the chance at 11 p.m. He was objected to as an alien, but produced his naturalization papers to prove his right of suffrage. In all cases of this kind it was decided to let judgment stand until the revising officer finds the affidavit properly recorded in its legal place.

One Tory witness testified that John Dillon earned only $30 in the year, another that he did nothing and earned nothing, and another that his father considered him a loafer and had not spoken to him for three years. Mr. Dillon's declaration that he had earned over $300 during the year was quoted in rebuttal. Mr. Fraser let the matter stand until Monday, and if Mr. Dillon does not appear his name will be struck off.

Wm. Ashman was objected to by the Conservatives and served with a subpona to present himself at court. Mr. Ashman did not turn up, and the Tories urged strongly that he should be made an example of for his disregard of that legal command. The Liberals offered no objections what-

James Richardson, peddler, said he earned on an average $300 per year. He had to board his horse and himself, and generally had $1 a week surplus. "Joe Graham, there, gets most of my money," said he, pointing to Mr. G.

Mr. Graham volunteered to give evidence on Mr. Richardson's income. The latter bought most of his stuff from witness, and made about $4 per week. He had only made one sale to him since September.

Mr. Richardson—How do you know what I make? I earn money that you know nothing about. You told me before that you would see I did not vote.

Mr. Hill appeared yesterday and disproved the assertion. He had been served with two subpoenas, and a slight misunderstanding arose. Mr. Essery admitted his mistake and asked pardon.

The Liberal counsel had reason to complain of the deficiency of the evidence given by Conservative witnesses, who appeared to seldom ask a man's whereabouts if they found him absent from his alleged place of residence.
