the imperial munitions board had been able to accomplish in the establishment of its assembling and loading plant would probably have ended in failure.

RUSSELLS COULD HAVE DONE WORK.

"What we have said as to the time fuses does not apply to the graze fuses. It is undoubted that that type of fuse could have been produced in Canada within the time required by Canadian manufacturers, as has been demonstrated by what they, and especially the Russell Motor Car Company, have since done. BELIEVED HE COMMITTED HIMSELF.

'The explanations of Col. Carnegie for giving to the American Ammunition Company the contract for the manufacture of the 1.666,666 of these fuses which were required by the war office, and the shell committee was authorized to obtain, were that the shell committee, by the letter of the 21st of May to Chief Bassick, and to give him a contact for 2,500,000 time fuses. Gen. Bertram appears to have been of the same opinion as Col. Carnegie as to the binding effect of the negotiations with Bassick and his associates and of the letter to Bassick of the 21st May. Col. Carnegie's view as to what it was his duty to do may account for his failure to consider the placing of the contract for the graze fuses with Canadian manufacturers or with the International Arms and Fuse Company, which might otherwise be inex- sonal friend of Gen. Hughes, anxious

"Fully recognizing, as we do, the imperative duty of persons in the position in which Col. Carnegie found himself, to deal honorably with those with whom they are negotiating, and to carry out promises they have given, though not legally binding on them, even if loss may be suffered in doing it, we feel bound to say that we do not think a high-minded businessman with Col. Carnegie's responsibilities and experience in affairs, would have come to the conclusion to which Col. Carnegie came as to the obligation the committee was under, or that he would have hesitated to make what arrangements the new condition called for, regardless of the fact that the persons with whom he was negotiating might be disappointed or even suffer loss.

MORE CARE WAS REQUIRED.

'It is plain that the difficulty the shell committee found itself gravest consideration, we are com- higher up.' in after the receipt of the cable of May 28 would have been avoided if, before Col. Carnegie and Gen. Bertram took steps which they considered had the effect of committing them to purchase 5,000,000 time fuses, the instructions from the war office in the cables of the 17th of April, which explicitly required at least one-third of the complete rounds to be supplied with graze fuses, had been examined "And we think it regrettable, especially in view of Col. Watt's letter of the 4th of June, that before finally concluding the contracts of the 19th of June, 1915, Col. Carnegie did not inform the other members of the shell committee, and Col. Watts in particular, of the fact that these contracts provided for the making of 1,666,666 fuses of a kind which could be produced in Canada with oped into preparing for taking and re-

We do not doubt that in the actual circumstances in which he found himself on the 28th March, Col. Carnegie was actuated by what he rightly deemed to be the urgency of the case.

"Nothing that we have said is intended to suggest or imply any doubt as to the integrity of Col. Carnegie, or to reflect upon his standing or capacity as an expert ordnance adviser, but we feel bound to say that in our opinion a mistake was made in placing upon his already overburdened shoulders the work of conducting what may be called the business or commercial part of the transactions with which he had to deal.
