Finding the allowing the billion of the more natural than that she should say "Yes, I admit I killed Frank Westwood!"

The prisoner in her statement, which she made so glibly in the box, contradicted no less than 13 witnesses in material points. Nine of these witnesses are impartial citizens, and only four of them police officers. What can you conclude but that her statement was a bold and unbloshing perjury! Why did she deny that she was at Croziers'? The fact that her being there was not a fact inconsistent with her innocence. The scene of the tragedy is two miles distant. The mere fact of her being at Croziers' and only for his life." You are not to make that statement was a bold and unbloshing perjury! Why did she deny that she was at Croziers'? The fact that her being there was not a fact inconsistent with her innocence. The scene of the tragedy is two miles distant. The mere fact of her being at Croziers' and only for his life." son for the denial was manifest—it was because her presence there was inconsistent with the story of her movements.

The fact that no attempt had been made to break down the testimony of Flora McKay, except by the denial of the prisoner, was the best proof that the statements of the child were true, and that the prisoner failed to make the appointment with her to attend the theatre on Oct. 6. Is there any reason why the putative child of the prisoner should tell a story which tells so strongly against her mother if it is not true? Would not the ties of flesh and blood rather lead her to tell a story favorable to the prisoner? Then Mrs. Phyle corroborates Flora.

What's your conclusion from her, denial of the evidence of Richard Vyse that she had a revolver?

There are some witnesses from whom counsel cannot wrest a confession that their statements are false. I admit that I was mable to cope with the ability of Clara Ford, as evidenced in the witness box, but I ask you to recollect the manner in which Clara Ford spoke of the detectives. Did you not note the legal mind? Did you not observe its counterpart in the address to the jury by the learned counsel for the prisoner?

Contrast the prisoner's demeanor in the witness box with her story as to how she was worried and troubled, and then call to your mind how she described with marvelous minuteness what she alleges took place in the detective office, and then believe her story if you can.

Do you mean to say that with the light shining in the hall, he could not tell whether it was a negro or a white man who stood on the steps? Where is James Lowe? Why is he not brought forward and put in the box to see it there is any similarity between his appearance and the description given by Westwood of his assailant?

Strong Words These.

He dwelt at length upon the fact that the prisoner had been kept at the detectives' office from 4 until nearly! It o'clock, with Reburn continually at her, and asked: "Would you wonder, with such inhuman, such brufal treatment as ake was subjected to, that a woman should say anything to get away from the clutches of these vultures? This woman, if her story is to be believed, was taken by the throat and the state ment choked out of her by a man who was merciless, relentless, knowing-that bis whole reputation was at stake. I am almost ashamed to think I am a man when I realize that a fellow-citizen of mine could be gaught of conduct of that kind. Beause, gentlemen, I am gloing to ask you to believe her fiscener when the prisoner with respect to the conduct of that kind. "Clara Ford that she was at all? Would she have made an alleged confession at all? The fact that she was guilty would have been uppermost in her thoughts and, knowing her cleverness, would she have admitted anything that implicated her in the slightest possible degree? Had she been a simple or foolish woman she might, but being the woman she is her in the slightest possible degree? Had been up at Parkdale she might have been suspected, was the frankness of innocence, and not the badge of zuit."

The fact that the prisoner did not purchase the men's clothes for a purpose and freely admits that she wore them frequently out of sheer devilment destroys the force of the Crown's theory, as to the clothes.

As far as can be learned the business men of Toronto cleared very little whisky or sugar before the advance in duties, evidently not anticipating any change. As far as learned only one firm here had a large stock of sugar on hand. A shipload of sugar reached Montreal on Thursday, and it is not likely that it was cleared. Had it been so it would have been a nice round sum for the Montreal sugar people. The Halifax sugar people seem to have been the most fortunate, as they have on hand raw sugar, the increased duty of which exceeds over $125,000, a very considerable portion of which will be clear gain to them or to their customers, to whom they have sold a portion of it. The advance of whisky is equal to $10 a barrel, but it does not appear that anybody cleared any great amount.

Refined sugars sold Saturday at 4 1-4c in Toronto in a jobbing way, an advance of 3-4c. Yellows are also 3-4c higher, the minimum price being 31-4c.
