

products. On the basis of available measures, these consumer gains could be large enough to outweigh producer losses, meaning that efficiency gains or increases in income to the Canadian economy as a whole would come about from including agriculture in an FTA.