Statements of Clergyman at Baptist Convention Raise Ire of Hamilton Chief Magistrate.

Hamilton Chief Magistrate.

Hamilton, Oct. 19.—(Special.)—
That Rev. W. M. Corkery of Crown
Point was "talking thru his hat" when he told his fellow delegates to the Baptist convention in Montreal that the municipal government of Hamilton would do nothing toward moral and social reform, "only by the vigorous kicking of public opinion," was in effect the opinion expressed by Mayor Geo. H. Lees, when informed this moraing of the Crowng Point minister's statement.

"He is evidently not well posted on what we have done," said the mayor at the same time recalling the efforts towards social betterment, which have been made since he became the chief migistrate of the city, and the support given the people who opposed the renewal of the Stockyards Hotel Ilcense last spring. At the present time the most important work is being done by the medical health officer, who is waging an effective campaign against the embryo alums in this city, and these mayor points out, is the highest form of moral and social reform work. An interesting feature of the minister's attack on the municipal government is the fact that Mayor Lees was almost unanimously supported by the moral and social reform work. Justice and Sunshine.

The cold dignity of Hamilton's police court was suspended this morning, while Alderman John Forth occupied the bench in the absence of Magistrate Jelfs, and for a brief period dispensed justice and sunshine. The acting magistrate's expansive and inclusive smile, aided and abetted by his merry, twinkling eye, pervaded the staid ball of justice, and for once converted that sombre stage of action into a haven of cheerfulness. The backbenchers joyously responded to the subtle influence, the newspaper reporters displayed a transient giddiness of delight, the court crier temporarily abandoned his sepulchral tone, and the few prisoners who perforce faced his worship seemed not sorry that fate had brought them at this particular time before the majesty of the law. Even Deputy Chief of Police Whatley, who arrived late, could not resist the potent charm of the court, and it is said that his grim visage relaxed and that the suggestion of a smile flitted across his frigid counage relaxed and that the suggestion of a smile flitted across his frigid coun-A trio of unfortunate who had imbibed too freely of liquid cheer asked the clemency of the court, and two of them went their ways rejoicing, with kindly advice in lieu of the customary fine. One of the party of British journalists who recently made a flying tour thru the Dominion under the guidance of a Canadian immigration official was Robert Baird, owner of an influential Belfast newspaper and half a dozen other publications. Mr. Baird's impressions of Canada and Canadians are not altogether favorable. He thinks that the youths of Canada are receiving a course of education "too elevated to be of any practical use to them in the Dominion." He says he found the recently-arrived immigrants are not of a desirable class, being too lazy to give good results. He deplores the real estate speculation in the west, which, he says, amounts to a mania, and will result in a crash before long. The average Canadian he found to be "surly and uncivil," and women in Canada, he thinks, are treated with greater har hness than in the old country. Canada's "one bright spot," he considers to be the liquor laws and their enforcement which tend to make the drinking of intoxicating liquor a freak rather than a habit.

Mr. Baird's criticism of the character of Canadian school education is in some degree justified; but the defect which he alludes to has already been noticed and in every province of Canada there is now a tendency to make the school courses more practical by introduction of manual training and technical instruction. His criticism of One of the party of British journal
