He met her in the hall when she ran down ten minutes later, fearful lest she had kept him waiting, and led her into the supper room; letting her take her place behind the tea tray without one of the tenderly gallant speeches with which a bridegroom would naturally install his bride in the chair always apwants, and talked as much as usualperhaps more—in the endeavor to put her at her ease; telling how the flow"True friend," echoed the doctor's ers upon the tea-table and in her chamber were sent over at noon from Judge Provost's conservatory; that the silver service was a present from the Baxters, the bronze mantel-clock from Fanny Provost, who was very anxious her and resume their old intimacy. Selina Bradley had sent the chased silver butter-bowl, and other Ham-Ilton families had testified their goodwill by elegant and suitable gifts.

"I am every day more glad that you spent last winter here," he said. "You do not come as a stranger; you have already pleasant associations town and its inhabitants, and gained a sorry to say, Mr. Fordham, that my foothold, I find, in many hear

He had unwittingly dealt as direct a blow at the secret panel that hid the skeleton in her heart, as he had at Orrin Wyllys' indurated conscience the previous evening.

Jessie had no words in which to reply; sought to conceal her confusion by steadfastly regarding the pattern on her plate-one of a set of china Roy had purchased in Dresden, she discovered, presently, when she remarked upon its beauty.

"I had no idea you had such exquis-ite taste." She made a bold attempt to break through the nameless but powerful constraint that kept down every thing like easy or merry converse on "I expect to be in a state of perpetual astonishment on that score for a long time to come. I did not know that learned scholars ever condescended to consider such pretty details of domestic life as porcelain and carpets.

He put back his chair without replying directly to the compliment, at which, to her mortification, he looked rather pained than pleased. "If you have finished your supper, perhaps you would like to go over the house," he said, politely. "Or, if you are tired, we will postpone it until to-

"I should greatly prefer going now," catching at the prospect of some mitigation of the growing stiffness.

The survey was a quiet progress for the most part, certainly not accomplishing the end she hoped for. Roy said little, and Jessie felt very awkward, as door after door was opened, and she appreciated the thoughtfulnes that had ministered to her comfort, from first to last, yet was forbidden by the mysterious spell chaining her tongue, to thank him who had wrought it all. But when they reached the sittingroom, where the flames were crackling and curling among the wood on the hearth, and her chair and fire screen the nome restruir the scene broke down the ice wall. The feelings that had gathered to oppression upon her heart, overflowed her eyes, and choked her articulation.
"This is too much," she exclaimed, catching Roy's hand in hers, and gazing tearfully into his face. "Oh, what

She could say no more. "The mistress of this room and this house," responded Roy, in kindly serlousness. "One who has a right to expect every attention I can bestow. This your sanctum. Nobody shall enter

It without your permission. Jessie tried to smile playfully. 'Excepting yourself.'

'When you want me, I shall come," was the evasive reply.
"Surely you will not wait-"

The remonstrance was cut short by a tap at the door, signaling Mrs. Baxter's impetuous entrance.

"My dearest lamb!" she cried with a strangled sob, clasping her cousin in her embrace.

"The doctor would come the instant he had swallowed his tea," she tried to cover Jessie's emotion and her own by saying, when she could speak clear-"I told him it was barbariously unfeeling and unromantic; that, according to all rules of etiquette and sentiment, you should pass the evening without the intrusion of company; but he was obstinate. I don't believe you two have the remotest conception of his favoritism for you!"

Meantime the doctor had, in his odd fashion, slipped his hand under the young wife's chin, and raised to the light a strangely agitated face—eyes swimming in tears, forehead slightly puckered with the effort after self-control, the little eddies of smiles breaking up around the mouth. Roy saw in it the whole history of the shipwreck of her heart and life, and her womanly determination to keep the knowledge of the disaster to herself. Would the physiognomist's keenly solemn gaze detect as much?

Neither of the lately-wedded pair was prepared for the remark with which he released the blushing Jessie.

"I wanted to see if the heart of her husband could safely trust in her. My daughter, do you know what a good man you have married?"

"Do not raise her expectations to an unreasonable height, my dear sir," in-terposed Roy, in time to forestall her reply. "And let me thank you in her name, and in mine, for the honor, you have done us in this early visit."

The doctor accepted the compliment and the chair that the host wheeled forward, in profound silence. The conversation had been carried on by the others for several minutes before he again joined in. He was aroused then by his wife's laudations of Orrin's gen-erosity, as displayed in his bridal present.

"I don't see how you can take it so quietly," she berated the recipient.
"One would suppose planos were given away every day. And you should value the instrument the more highly because it is the gift of your great admirer and true friend, Mr. Wyllys. I assure you, propriated by the mistress of heart Mr. Fordham, nothing could exceed his and home. "The only safe rule among friends is candor. It is seldom I attribute sinister purposes to one whom I do not know certainly to be malevolent or hypocritical, but when declare it to be my firm conviction that Orrin Wyllys-(of whom the best thing I know is that he has descended physically from the same stock that produced your husband, my child)this to Jessie-"when I affirm that I believe him to be a wolf who ravens safely and reputably under the cowardly cover of sheep's clothing, I am not, as my dear Jane here would persuade herself and you, the victim of causeless prejudice." When the invited guests arrived, and I learned that the terms of their previous intercourse entitled him to become her cavalier on all occasions; cases of conscience and conduct-when I compared this circumstance with his careless and apparently accidental mention of her to Mrs. Baxter, and his pretended indifference to her coming, I made up my mind that he was parreason he did not care to divulge. Tudor, who arrived here yes-terday on the White Star liner Majestic, for they were informed by cable just before the vessel left Liverpool of the death by drowning of their husband and father, Senator W. The amateur detective is as humorous character as any of Shakespeare's clowns, or even old Dogberry himself. He finds the most aston- 7 ishing clues, and generally follows them until he brings up about as far away from the solution of the mystery as mortal well may be. But the specialist in the detection of crime, Sherlock Holmes, is a man who reads clues, as the Indian reads a trail. Every step he takes is a step to success. It's much the same way in the detection of disease. While the amateur is blundering along over misleading symptoms, the specialist goes right to the real cause and puts an arresting hand upon the disease. It is in such a way that Dr. R. V. Pierce, chief consulting physician to the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y., succeeds in hunting out and arresting diseases, where the less experienced practitioners fail. More than thirty years of special study and experience have enabled Dr. Pierce to read symptoms as easily and as truly as the Indian reads a trail which is without a hint for a less acute vision than his. A WOMAN'S PLUCK WINS

How a Drunken Husband Was Made Sober Man by a Determined Wife.

She writes: "I had for a long time been thinking of trying the Samaria Prescription treatment on my husband for his drinking habits, but I was afraid that he would discover that I was giving him medicine, and the thought unnerved me. I hesitated for nearly a week, but one day when he came home very much intoxicated, and his week's salary nearly all spent, I threw off all fear and determined to make an effort to save our home from the ruin I saw coming, at all hazards. I sent for your Samaria Prescription and put it in his coffee as directed next morning and watched and prayed for the result. At noon I gave him more and also at supper. He never suspected a thing, and I then boldly kept on giving it regularly, as I had discovered something that set every nerve in my body tingling with hope and ness, and I could see a bright future spread out before me — a peaceful, happy home, a share in the good things of life, an attentive, loving husband comforts, and everything else dear to a woman's heart, for my husband had told me that whisky was vile stuff, and he was taking a dislike to it. It was only too true, for before I had given him the full course he had stopped drinking altogether, but I kept giving the medicine till it was gone, and then sent for another lot to have on hand if he should relapse, as he had done from his promises before. He never has, and I am writing you this letter to tell you how thankful I am. I honestly believe it will cure the worst cases.
