Scuttling of Foe's Ships

Has Lesson For Allies

"Sir" John Alcock sounds fine. Nobody will be grudge that gallant gentleman his title. He got it by performance, not "pull."

A Berlin paper says Germany submits because of the stand taken by the people. Of course in German waters, is an act so essentially German that it should not amaze. Put on their honor to turn over the fleet upon the conclusion of peace, they simply violated their pledges after the best Prussian manner so the conclusion of peace, they simply violated their pledges after the best Prussian manner so glaringly demonstrated by a hundred acts prepared to the computation of the stand taken by the people. Of course foch's half million men standing to had nothing the limpy-legged morris chair. "Pirst—How much money did we have after they was parted. He was parted we have after they was parted as they say of the stand taken by the people. Of course for his half million men standing to had nothing to do with it.

Vanderlip, the New York banker expresses some worry over the huge sums owing the United States by the old world. He need not worry as the people of the stand taken by the people. Of course for his half as much more that don't deserve it half as much. Be they are the people of the stand taken by the people of course for his half will be paid be promptly and in full.

ceding, during, and after the war. The amazing feature of the incident is that the Allies should have trusted them. The word of the German is worthless. He considers his guarantee good only so far as necessity or expediency demands. In themselves oath, agreement, compact, carry no weight. Foch and Clemenceau have never had any illusions on this matter. Their insistence on the peace treaty including ractical conditions that for many years' will enforce the carrying out of the Allied will, was due in a large measure to the belief that German honor could not be relied upon. Their stand for what some considered harsh condiions and unnecessary precautions has been strongly justified by the Scapa Flow scuttlings.

The whole business is just another proof that the Hun has not been changed by the chastening which usually accompanies defeat. He is as unreliable and untrustworthy under republican leadership as he was when imperialism ruled. Germany will require the closest watching until the last penny of her debt is paid and retribution satisfied. The sinking of the German fleet should increase the Allied vigilance against German trickery and treachery.

Edgar Allen Poe is credited with being the first person to have any practical ideas concerning transoceanic flight. He wrote an imaginary story about it, because he was in need of money, and it was printed in the New York Sun, April 13, 1844. At that time there was a campaign on by the press to secure news by quicker methods. The Atlantic cable had not been laid and ships were slow. Poe seized the opportunity and wrote a wonderful story, with minute details, describing the remarkable trip of an airship from sponsible for the enemy's violation of his promise to conduct himself decently, according to the rules.
