

A portion only of the building is to be constructed this year; the remainder is under tender for construction during the summer of 1901. The part of the old building to be replaced was selected so as not to seriously interfere with the regular teaching work of the session. Some of the new rooms will be available immediately after the Christmas holidays, and the entire building will be complete for the beginning of the session 1901-1902.

The new curriculum of studies referred to in the last Annual Report was in operation last session for the second year class, and is now in operation for the third year. This necessitated the inauguration of new courses in the Faculty of Arts, in Economics and Political Science, Art and Archaeology, Roman Law, Jurisprudence, Constitutional Law and History, Anatomy, and Physiology. To provide for the first two courses, new appointments were made by the Board of Governors; the other courses are taken in the Faculties of Law and Medicine.
