Wanted a Steady Job. George Schneider of Lamar tells this one: A man struck a farmer for a steady job. The farmer said very well, he'd sure give him one, all right. They worked all day and then all night. They worked all the next day, and kept at it until twelve o'clock the next night. Then the farmer said he guessed they'd knock off and go to bed. At two o'clock he called his hand and told him to get up and they'd go back to work. The hand came down stairs carrying his grip. The farmer saw it and said: "What's the matter? Ain't going to leave, are you?" "Yep," said the hand, "I'm gonna quit."

After the War. A youngster may get into a little of trouble now by staidstopping lively, but in the hereafter when he tries for a senatorship or something worth while and has no war record to attest his quality he will be a gone goiding—Houston Post.

New York's prisons and reformatories are steadily getting emptied, as a result of the war.

The United States are about to spend $100,000,000 on warships "smaller than cruisers."
