Cordance with the instructions issued by their organization. Regarding delay to traffic, Mr. Downie while admitting of course that the absence of the men would be noticeable, did not believe there would be any interference with business. He believes things will go along on this division at least, in the usual way, and that for the present at least the company's traffic will not suffer.

The death occurred last evening, at his hone, 28 St. Patrick street, of Louis Thoroughgood, one of the most highly skilled leather workers in theity. Mr. Thoroughgood, who was sixty-seven years of age, came to this country from England about 1889, and took charge of the custom making department in George Ramage's business on Germain street. After that concern changed hands he remained for twelvy years with James Driscoll, the new owner. Afterwards he removed to Fredericton, but returned to St. John and has since been in business for himself. Ht was a particularly competent work man and an estimable citizen.
