AUTOMOBILES ALREADY ARE TAKING A LARGE PLACE IN CANADIAN AGRICULTURE

By means of this auto, as here shown, Mr. Eimer Harris, of the Oakwood (Victoria Co., Ont.) Creamery, does the collecting and hauling of cream, which previously required three men with separate rigs. Need we say more to show why the automobile has become popular with and is quite generally used by many progressive creamery owners? Then, in general agriculture, too, the auto is coming into use. We have been to visit several farmer readers of Farm and Dairy who have autos, and find them of great service. We are informed that one dealer in a small village in Northumberland Co., Ont., last year sold 16 automobiles to farmers. The day of the auto for Canadian farmers has most surely arrived, even as it came some years ago to farmers in the United States, where farmers' autos now, it is said, number over three to one in excess of those owned in cities.
