VALUABLE DOCUMENT.

Evidence in the United Empire Loyalist Claims For Losses and Services—Ontario Archives.

The most important event in the early history of Upper Canada is the coming of the U. E. Loyalists. It forms the foundations and basis of our provincial life and institutions. Much has been written about the U. E. Loyalists, but much of historical value still remains to be given to the public, and as their descendants are numerous, powerful, characteristically tenacious of the patriotic principles, and sensitive to the good name of their fathers no doubt documents bearing on their services and sufferings will continue to appear in print for years to come.

In his researches through the papers and literature of the later part of the 18th century respecting Ontario, Mr. Alexander Fraser, the Provincial Archivist, got on the trail of a valuable and voluminous manuscript concerning the services and losses of the U. E. Loyalists, a copy of which, having come into the possession of the Bureau of Archives has been issued in the form of his Second Report.

The origin of the manuscript and its preservation are a story in themselves. The British Parliament passed an act in 1783 appointing a commission to classify the claims of U. E. Loyalists. The chairman was John Wilmot and no time was lost in grappling with the work assigned to it. But it soon became clear that certain claims must be presented and evidence heard on the spot. The commissioners, Mr. Jeremy Pemberton, and Charles Dundas, therefore came to Canada on this duty. Mr. Pemberton was a barrister of Lincoln's Inn, and had been appointed to fill a vacancy on the commission. Col. Dundas belonged to the ancient Scottish family of Argyll, branches of which had given leading men to bar, bench, and Parliament. He owned the picturesque estate of Carron, Stirlingshire, and there his family resided during his absence in Canada. These commissioners held sittings in Canada from 1785, until 1789, and obtained much interesting evidence from the claimants who appeared in person or by agent. They told where they had been located before the outbreak of the Revolutionary War, the value of their holdings, stock, chattels, or business, as the case might be, which they had lost on account of their loyalty; also what services they had rendered to the British cause, and in what capacity, and where they had settled in Canada, making altogether valuable sworn evidence as to their circumstances in life, and the quality of the people who first, in large numbers, settled down to hew out homes for themselves from the Ontario forests. As the evidence proceeded the commissioners wrote it down and made notes and observations as to its genuineness. The manuscript containing this evidence, and part of that pertaining to Canada received in London, by Chairman Wilmot, was taken to Carron Hall, by Col. Dundas and left there by him. How it was discovered and rescued from obscurity is thus told:

In 1844 Gen. Sir Henry Lecky was in Canada organizing a magnetic survey by order of the British Government. In 1848 he married the daughter of Chief Justice Sir John Beverley Robinson, Bart., and through this relationship became interested in the early history of the country and in the Smithsonian Institute, Washington, which had then issued a letter pointing out the advantages of accumulating all manuscript material relating to the history of America. In 1860 Sir Henry Lecky married, as his second wife, a grand-daughter of Col. Dundas, the U. E. Loyalist commissioner, and while staying at Carron Hall, in 1861, he saw the original manuscript for the first time. His old interest in early Canada revived and he suggested that the MS. would find a fitting home on this side of the Atlantic, but there being no public Archives Office in Canada, at that time, and remembering the appeal made by the Smithsonian Institute for such material, Sir Henry advised his wife's family to send the MS. there. This was accordingly done, but it remained there, apparently neglected, till an Act of Congress was passed transferring all manuscripts in possession of the Institute to the Archives of Congress, where they have since remained. During the lapse of years the 35 volumes forming the manuscript had received little or no attention and had become through damp and decay very frail and difficult to read. The officials of Congress have more recently employed a special workman, for more than a year, in repairing the tattered leaves and it is from the MS. so restored that the copy now in Mr. Fraser's custody was made. The manuscript differs from the transcript in the Public Records Office, London, in that it contains notes and references made by the commissioners during the proceedings, indicating their opinion of the evidence, sometimes caustically expressed. Considering the faded condition of the original, the copy taken has been, apparently, very successfully accomplished and in the printing for publication the Archivist has reproduced the spelling, abbreviations, and phraseology of the manuscript, literally, as is customary in such cases. The original pages of the MS. are given for facility of reference, and a very full index—a huge labor in itself—is furnished as is also an instructive introduction. The whole comprises two parts, of some 1400 pages, and is a monument to the industry of the Archivist, for a great deal of other work in the way of copying, collecting, and binding, was being carried on during the preparation and progress of the volumes through the press.

Among the familiar names of Loyalists to be found in the report the following are a few: Ault, Baby, Baldwin, Ball, Barton, Beaman, Beardmore, Beckwith, Beverley, Botsford, Brant, Buiey, Burnham, Butler, Cartwright, Chrysler, Embree, Gage, Hathaway, Hasen, Holland, Hough, Hoyt, James, Jarvis, Jessup, Johnson, Jones, MacDonald, McKee, Macneil, Macpherson, Macdonald, Nelles, Page, Robinson, Rogers, Ryckman, Ryerson, Lippincott, St. Leger, Servos, Shaw, Sherwood, Small, Snell, Stockton, Strange, Street, Stringer, Sudbury, Tisdale, Urquhart, Vanalstine, Vanduren, Vanhorne, Vanover, Vanderburg, Vanderlip, Valentine, Van Camp, Waite, Warner, Washburn, Watrous, Wellbanks, Wentworth, Westcott, Whitney, Whitman, Wildman, Wilcox, Wilkins, Wilmot, Wilsey, Winter, Wraze, Wood, Woodbridge, Woodstock, Wright, Yeomans.

WOMAN'S INTUITION.

Try to Flavor This Sixth Sense With Sound Judgment.

Woman has heard altogether too much about her intuition, her wonderful sixth sense that enables her to jump in the dark and arrive at the very spot to which men are feeling their way inch by inch with a lantern—her flash judgment that no amount of patient investigation could improve on. Women have been patted on the head so much for the gift of second sight that they have come to presume on it, to count their judgments infallible because they did not work for them and to shirk all patient plodding because they can arrive so much quicker at a jump.

As a natural consequence the woman who is given to this habit has a judgment that is utterly untrained and unworthy. Not one woman in fifty can show a well balanced mind which judges independently of her own prejudices and desires or a proper sense of proportion to help her separate the trivial from the important. The feminine estimate of anybody or anything must be corrected because of so many side influences that half the time it is worthless. An occasional inspiration or coincidence that lands her in the center of a bullseye will not make up for it.

Women have every faculty of arriving at same, impersonal judgments, and when the world gets tired of praising them for inspirations which they do not possess they may shake off the mental slovenliness and develop these faculties to their normal power. Women's intuition will be just as valuable. They will reach what they have in view by a rational, logical process rather than by shutting their eyes and jumping hopefully. —Cleveland Plain Dealer.

More Terrible Than War!

More terrible than war, famine or pestilence is that awful destroyer, that hydraulic monster, Consumption, that annually sweeps away more of earth's inhabitants than any other single disease known to the human race.

"It is only a cold, a trifling cough," say the careless, as the irritation upon the delicate mucous membrane causes them to hark away with an irritating tickling of the throat. When the irritation settles on the mucous surface of the throat, a cough is the result. To prevent Bronchitis or Consumption of the Lungs, do not neglect a cough however slight as the irritation spreading throughout the delicate lining of the sensitive air passages soon leads to fatal results. In the first appearance of a cough or cold you would take a few doses of you would save yourself a great deal of unnecessary suffering. Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup contains all the life-giving properties of the pine trees of Norway, and for Asthma, Croup, Whooping Cough and all Throat and Lung affections it is a specific. Be sure when you ask for Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup to get it. Don't be humbugged into taking something else. Price 25 cts.

Miss Lena Johnston, Toledo, Ont., writes: "I have used Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup for three troubles after taking numerous other remedies, and I must say that nothing can take the place of it. I would not be without a bottle of it in the house."

VISITORS FROM THE NORTH.

Characteristics of Several Varieties of the Owl Described.

The owl is a ghostly bird, always suggesting some vague association with weird and uncertain visitors of the night. The long, tremulous call of the great horned owl, the mirthless, questioning hiss of the barred owl, and the timid, wailing whistle of the smallest member of the family are alike replete with the spirit of shadowy mystery, coming out of the night as voices of the unknown. The lightness of their silent flight among the close branches of the woods at night is a place abhorred by the unlearned, and in the gesture of the unearthly, and in the dimness of intellectual twilight they have helped the active fancy to people the air with weird and threatening phantoms. The snowy owl, ghostly in its arctic plumage, is a terror to its habits, and this may have saved the timid from many disordered imaginings. The most dreaded enemies are those we create ourselves, and the terror of a white owl moving silently among the dark evergreens would make a peculiarly effective story. Nature in her eternal adjustments has made the snowy owl diurnal, the white that would warn the crouching sparrows and skurrying rodents in the night being an easy concealment among the hummocks of snow in the open northern day.

The island sand bar and marshes have been visited by a small party of snowy owls this winter, and they have not shown the innocent confidence in the snow that the other species show from the far north, says a writer in "The Globe." The herring gulls are scarcely more alert in discerning the proximity of guns or more accurate in estimating their range. They have moved about unafraid, with steady flight, freely traversing the island and marshes. Mice, rats, sparrows, and other pests, have learned of the new danger, and are ready to seek cover on the first appearance of expanding white wings in the upper air. The snowy owl likes a commanding perch, where he can sit erect and turn his round white head thoughtfully from side to side, searching the ground with his wonderfully discerning vision. From such a perch he can drop down with startling suddenness upon a mouse or squirrel, or venture out of cover. On the island the buildings that are associated with the noisy hilarity of summer are selected by the snowy owls as points of observation. One bird fell a victim through the easy concealment afforded by adjacent buildings, but the others are far more cautious than their occasional dimwitted victims.

The snowy owl breeds in the far north, but generally makes a winter visit to the lake country. He has not the stay-at-home habits of his nocturnal relatives. Though quite wary, he is so large and conspicuous that death continually threatens. A discouraging proportion of these visitors are generally destroyed. When the ice forms in large, irregular masses and barriers along the shore, a snowy owl can easily find a perch that will give his telescopic eyes a wide range. Though beautifully conspicuous he cannot be approached, and the advances of an observer are met with an unflinching stare. A long excursion over the ragged edge of the ice-bordered lake shows the futility of all such overtures. This grandest member of the owl family has a good reputation as a destroyer of vermin, but that would not save him if exposed to the destructive weapons of what his enemies call civilization. He owes his survival to a fondness for the great, unpeopled north, where, protected by the color of the living winter, he lives and moves in a natural harmony with the great arctic silence.

SOME VALUABLE CLAIMS.

Big Holdings in the Cobalt District by War Veterans.

The time for the application of veterans for land grants for military services expired on December 31, 1905, and it is understood that the time is to "expire" for good, and that the Government will not on any account make an extension.

Less than half of the men who have been given claims have located them. A number of the veterans have located in the townships of Dymont, Fox and Hudson, and these townships have been withdrawn by the Government from settlement, so far as the veterans are concerned, as they form part of the Cobalt district. Previous to the order withdrawing these townships, a large number of veterans made purchases because they were understood to be rich in mineral, and under the Veterans' Land Grant Act the mineral belongs to the locator, and this is one of the advantages over the ordinary settler. The claims of veterans located before the withdrawal order passed will hold good. In ordinary cases of settlement the minerals are reserved by the Crown. All the claims that have been assigned by veterans to other parties will be cancelled unless settlement duties are performed as in the case of the ordinary settler. Prospects are fairly good for a number of law suits over claims in this district.

Canadian Crime Steady.

"There has been a lot of talk about the increase of crime in Canada, but in thirteen years the number of our prison inmates has shown very little variation. Notwithstanding the great increase in population, many of whom are foreigners, our record will compare favorably with that of any country in the civilized world." So said Mr. W. B. Archibald, Dominion Parole Officer, recently, while talking to the Ottawa Canadian Club upon the work in which he is engaged. Mr. Archibald suggested the improved management of Canadian prisons, where convicts were taught a trade, and if so minded might lead honest lives. There had been 1,032 men released from penal institutions in 1904, and only twenty-four of these had been returned to prison for having again committed crime. About seventy had had their licenses cancelled for failure to report to the police or other causes.

TO HOLD THE SKIRT.

A Homemade Fastener That is Simple and Satisfactory.

A homemade skirt and waist fastener, providing more satisfactory even than the elaborate ones sold for goodly prices in the stores, may be made from a couple of dress hooks and the safety pins from a discarded pair of side garters. These are the little pins used to fasten the garters to the corset and having a separate slide on one side through which the elastic passes. They are preferred to the ordinary safety pins because of this slide, which prevents the hooks from slipping out of place.

Sew the dress hooks to the inside of the skirt band, one on each side of the center of back. Pin the safety pins in the waist as high up as it is desired to lift the skirt band and fasten by slipping the hooks into this little slide in the pins. This will hold the skirt securely in place, and if the pins are fastened to the substantial part of the clothing the waist also will be held down snug and trim.

Each skirt will need a pair of hooks, but only one set of the pins will be necessary, as these may be transferred from one waist to another. By this method of fastening there is no sewing, no fussing and no sagging of skirts.—Ladies' World.

Paris Restaurants.

A Chicago man just returned from a ramble in Europe declares that in Paris the traps for unwary travelers are innumerable as the sands of the seashore. One of the most familiar is the restaurant where the bill of fare is without prices, the check being made out according to what the customer seems able to pay. "I was bitten once or twice in this way," says the traveler, "but then I refused to order unless the menu mentioned the cost. Sometimes the proprietor protested feebly, but I told him that he didn't buy his victuals without knowing the price, and I should follow his example."
