See, during the paimy simes, when as any as five thousand head of slaves were exposed annually in the market place of Shendy—a traffic in which Mouses, like his kinsman, Zebehr Pashs, had grown enormously rich; an', for a mitable sum, he bought a daughter of Girolomo, a beautiful Greek girl. She became his third wife, and died in giving birth to a daughter, the inheritor of her pale and picturesque beauty, though shaded somewhat by the Arab mixture in her blood; but in her fourteenth year—a ripe age in allowed the season of the sun—her charms were said to surpass all that had been seen before, and had become the exaggerated theme of story tellers and song makers, even in the market places, and oates of Damanhour and Cairo.

The girl was named Isha (or Elizabeth) after her mother, and educated in such accomplishments as were deemed necessary to the wife of a powerful and wealthy Emir, for such Moussis destined her to be, if not perhaps of his friend and leader the Mahdi Achmet when the time came, but the old brigand—for the slave dealer was little better in spirit or habit when not absent fighting, plundering, and raiding in search of dellabs—seemed never happy save when in the society of this daughter, his only one, his other children being sons, four of whom had, fallen in battle against Hoks on the field of Kashgate.

Notwithstanding all the care with which the women of the East are seeluded in the Kah'ah or harem, Isha had a lover, a young Bedouin warrior named Kaheim Jesledeen, who, though he had no more hope of winning her to share his humble black tent than of obtaining the moon, loved her with all the wild passion of which his lawless Arab nature was capable. sword, his rine, and a horse with its abprings.

Yet Isha was not ignorant of the love the Bedouin bore her, as he had a sister named Emineh, who was a kind of companion and attendant of the former, and want between the lovers as carefully and subtly as any old Khatbeh, or betrother in the Abdin quarter in Cairo in the present hour, thus freely, bouquets symbolically arranged, the simple and beautiful love letters of Oriental life, were exchanged between them through the kind agency of Emineh. And be informed the reason we adopt the above system of selling is to give our cus-tomers a great benefit. Every purchaser will see the difference between our cost and the selling prices, and will be in a better position to judge our transactions in this SALE OF SALES.

As it is a well known fact our competitots are always advertising sales in the following manner: One says he will give 10 and 25 per cent. off, another says he will sell 50 cent goods at 15 cents, when at the same time their selling prices are, in a majority of cases, higher than arranged, the simple and beautist love letters of Oriental life, were exchanged between them through the kind agency of Emineh.

Sheikh Moussa loved his brilliant little daughter, but he loved money more, and when a careyan under an old business friend of his aamed Ebu al Ajuz (or "the son of the old woman," obtained by his mother's prayers in the mosque of Hassan at Cairo) passed, en route from Darfour for the capital and [Assiout, laden with ivory, gum, and slaves, chiefly women and girls, the dealer having heard of the beauty of Isha, applied to the Sheikh, and made him an offer which, as both were in the trade, he found himself, filial regard and affection apart—bound to consider.

Moussa, to do him justice, had no great inclination to sell his daughter, the light of his household, though he had remorselessly sold the daughters of others by the shousand; yet he was curious to know her value, as prices had gone down even before the arrival of Gordon at Khartoum, especially when Ebu al Ajuz spoke of the sum he was prepared to give, and that the purse-holder was no other than that generally cupposed misogynist, the Khedive himself.

He introduced the merchant to her Willinery, Miltimers.—Miss Mooney will sell all this line of goods at cost, with ten per cent. on. Don't allow this chance to pass but come straight to JONES'. This will make the Ladies smile, when they read about our Kid Gloves. It will be a smile of satisfaction as it is a well known fact that we sell the best make of glove that can be procured in the city. Just fancy buying them almost for cost, but remember it will only last for 30 days as it would be impossible for us to sell to make a legitimate return for our money invested at this price, ut having a very large stock on hand we are anxious to reduce, consequently we can give the muchaser goods at better value than any other establishment in the city. Why, because our storp is filled with the desirable goods the people want, and all 25 per cent, cheaper than as judge, however, by his own business exparience.

CORBET'S BLOCK,

"Allah Kerim!" he exciamed. "with her face, form, and entire appearance I have not the slightest fault to find," he frankly acknowledged; every motion, every feature display the most beautiful grace, symmetry, and proportion. Allah! she should be named Ayesba, after the perfect wife of the Prophet!" On hearing this a blush burned in the face of the girl, and she pulled down her yashmac or veil.

On hearing this a blush burned in the face of the girl, and she pulled down her yashmac or veil.

The merchant pressed Moussa to name her price, as they sat over their pipes and coffee, and so greatly did avarice exceed affection, that Moussa, who—said the writer in the Mubahir—it was thought would not have exchanged his daughter for the Emerald Mountain itself, was so dazaled by the offer made that he agreed to sell her, and preparations even were at once made for her departure glespite her sears, her entreaties, and her despair.

Khasim Jelaloden was filled with grief and consternation. Oh for Jinn or Efrits, the spirits born of fire, to aid him?

He had his fleet horse corned, refreshed by a bitter draught of bouza (not water), saddled, and in constant readiness for any emergency; and in the night, well armed, with his heart on fire and his brain in a whirl, he made his way secretly and softly to that part of the Zeriba in which the Kah'ah, or women's apartments, were situated—an act involving his death if caught, and caught he was by the guards of Moussa, who were about to slay him on the spot; but immemorial usuage has established a custom in the Desert that if a person who is in actual danger from another can in anticipation claim his protection, or touch him barehanded, his life is saved.

He passed himself as a Karami, or mere robber, and as such was made a close prisoner, detained to await the pleasure of Moussa, who had just then a good deat to occupy his mind. 10 doz. Fine German Woolen Shawls, Cream, White, Black and Cardinal.
