

PAUL VANE'S WIFE

CHAPTER LXI.

Colonel Fairlie, after the departure of his friends for Europe, remained but a few days in Philadelphia. His family ties were few, as he had only one sister and one brother, and both were married. His brother had a little family growing up around a cheerful hearth-stone, and his sister was a thorough society woman, whose heart was wrapped up in the social successes of herself and daughter, and the political triumphs of her husband, who stood high in the councils of the Democratic party. Neither of them would miss him much, he knew, so he bid them good-bye and returned to his quarters, at Fortness Monroe, there to wait most impatiently for tidings of the travellers.

"I am thirty-three years old. That is rather late in life for one to experience his first grande passion, and yet it is my first love, after all, for none of the boyish fancies I have had ever cling like this one. Let me see; it is almost two years now since I first met the lovely woman who fulfilled all the requisites of my ideal!" he thought, with an impatient sigh, as he walked alone by the solemn sea, its weird murmur chiming in with his restless thoughts.

He was most unhappy, this handsome, noble soldier—unhappy, with a pang all the more bitter because his conscience told him he had no right to feel this pain. Why had a cruel fate set his heart upon a woman who belonged to another man, when there were so many lovely and lovable women in the world free to make him happy if only he could have loved them? He knew that many women had sighed for him. He was rich, well-born, cultivated, handsome. He might have had his choice of a world of lovely girls. A strange fate had forced him into an attitude of secret, hopeless love for a beautiful, hapless woman as far beyond his reach as the stars that glittered in the far-off heavens.

"And her sorrows, her misfortunes, have drawn my heart-strings more closely about her," he mused, mournfully. "If Paul Vane had not turned traitor to her, if he had made her happy, perhaps I might have forgotten her now, but her troubles have kept her always in my thoughts. At first, thinking her dead, I believed it no sin to love her memory, and when I found her alive—yet more unfortunate than if she had been dead—I could not rest my heart away. Heaven grant she may win Paul Vane back when she goes to him this time with that little angel to plead her cause. Then, knowing her blessed and happy, I might crush this hopeless passion; and a heavy sigh breathed over his lips as he turned away from the window.

At length the suspense of waiting for letters was over. Willie Hennes wrote to his friend, and that letter contained the tidings that Vivian's passionate, prayerful appeal to her husband had been in vain. He had denied her, driven her away with his child, and clung to Loraine. "The cowardly cur! Why did I not kill him!" Eugene Fairlie groaned, in fierce indignation. He grew pale as death, as he thought of the "deed" which she had done, fiercely; then his rearguard mood would change to the tenderest thoughts of unhappy Vivian—Vivian so beloved, so adored, yet who never could be his own to love and comfort.

"She hears the blow with strange quietude, but it is because she is stoned by its terrible force," the poet wrote, feelingly. "She is very, very calm and still. It is like the strange hush of a summer evening just before a storm. A reaction must come to this strange mood. We tremble while we wait for it. Will she mad—will she destroy herself? If she does not, it will be little Star's love that will save her mother, and that love alone."

"Only once has she raised out of the apathetic calm with which she moves and speaks. It was when Aunt Sarah, carried away by her indignation, insisted that Mrs. Vane should at once secure a divorce from her husband. Then her pallid cheeks kindled with a crimson glow and her violet eyes flashed vengeance.

"Never!" she exclaimed. "Never shall I give her that triumph! Never shall she legally call him her husband! Let her live on in her shame, and when he waries of her he will be free to desert her. In that hour I shall have my revenge!"

"Can she mean that she will wait for him—that she will take him back if ever he comes cringing like the hound he is to her feet?" Eugene Fairlie wondered, and the thought was not pleasant. He would have liked for Vivian to have shown more pride and resentment. Surely it was in her, he thought, remembering the arch, spirited face he had known at first. He would have said then that she would become a noble woman, but never a weak saint. Had he been mistaken? Was she less human even than he believed her? She would be nothing less than angelic if she ever forgave Paul Vane.

While he was yet pondering these puzzling thoughts, ere yet he had become composed enough in mind to reply to his friend's letter, there came another from Italy following fast on the other.

"What now?" he asked himself, in a sort of terror; for, as he held the letter and saw on the back the clear chirography of his best friend, there came to him a startling presentiment of evil. Hurriedly he tore it open, his dilated brown eyes running over the closely written sheet. Then it fell from his shaking hand, and he sunk into a seat with a stifled groan.

Poor Vivian, the hapless football of fate and misfortune, another crushing blow had fallen on her breaking heart! Would she hear it and live? "Little Star was stolen yesterday while at play in the garden of the villa where we are now staying," said the letter. "Twenty-four hours have elapsed, and we have not yet the slightest clue except that her abductor was a man. Paul and Loraine have fled mysteriously from Rome Villa, leaving Mrs. Seasholtz, the maid, head-ache, and we suspect that it is the father who has stolen the child, perhaps through some impulse of natural affection. But so far we are unable to trace them in their guilty flight. Vivian is roused at last from his strange apathy and has been in the wildest hysterics ever since the disappearance of the child. Unless it is soon found, we fear the loss of her reason."

"It is Paul who has stolen the child. Surely he will restore it when he learns that she is so agonized over its loss. The dastard! How could he be so cruel as to deprive her of her sole comfort?" thought Eugene Fairlie, indignantly, little dreaming that jealous, undisturbed, and undisturbed, he had bribed Gord Vidal to steal beautiful little Star and consign her to a cruel fate.

CHAPTER LXII.

It was June at Arcady—rosy June, with honeysuckles in full flower scenting the very air with intoxicating sweetness, when Annie Seasholtz drank in luxuriously as she walked up the gravelled path toward the grand old house.

Annie had arrived in New York but a few days before from Europe, and had lost no time in presenting herself at Arcady, for she had something of importance to communicate to its mistress.

The pretty little maid walked with quite the air of the grande dame, for she had on her trim figure a real Parisian travelling dress, copied like her walk, from La Belle Lorraine. She had expended quite a sum out of her modest savings in procuring this costume with which to astonish her humble friends in the town of Lisle, where she had spent so many months with her mistress, the heiress of Arcady. She tossed her dark curly hair airily as she walked, and looked right and left through the shrubberies to see if she could detect any one admiring her graceful form in its foreign finery.

But no one was in the grounds that sunny afternoon at Arcady, and Annie saw no one until she neared the broad piazza, where the old Mrs. Lisle sat alone, a gracious, pathetic figure in her black dress and the soft silvery waves of hair beneath the tiny lace cap. Her face looked very sad, and the girl thought she seemed years older than on the day, scarcely six months ago, when her granddaughter, proud Lorraine, had gone away so suddenly with her husband and her maid from Arcady.

"Why, it is little Annie!" the mistress of Arcady cried, with a start. "Where is your mistress, girl? Has she come home at last?"

"No, ma'am; I came by myself, and I don't know where Mrs. Vane is—or Miss Leslie—whichever she is—for they do say that the first Mrs. Vane has turned up alive, and of course—"

"Hush!" said Mrs. Lisle, as sternly as her gentle voice could speak. She looked at the maid in keen distress, but Annie, who appeared to have a grievance, answered, pertly:

"La! Mrs. Lisle, 'tain't no more than every one else is saying, and I'm sure I've no call to be mealy-mouthed, seeing as how Miss Lorraine played me the meanest kind of a trick, running away and leaving me alone at Rose Villa among them black-skinned Etyalians!"

"Running away and leaving you in Italy, did you say, child?"

"Yes, ma'am, just that I put her back that night, and not a word of leaving, but next morning she and Mr. Vane and all the trunks was out and gone, Lord knows where, and me deserted, without a word or message, in that far-off foreign land! Do you wonder that I nearly cried my eyes out in my trouble, and never understood a thing until I heard that the first wife, Mrs. Vane, had been at the villa the day before with her own child, and that she had driven her maid and her away and then run away themselves, for fear she'd put the law on them?"

"Annie, you must not speak of my granddaughter so disrespectfully. She believes that she is acting right. She and Mr. Vane believe that the person calling herself Vivian Vane is an impostor," quavered the feeble old voice.

"Begging your pardon, Mrs. Lisle, Miss Lorraine is no grandchild of yours, now! No, I won't hush, ma'am, for you must bear the truth. It's been on my conscience this two years 'most, and I've kept Miss Lorraine's wicked secret long enough. When she left me in that mean, heartless way, all my liking for her turned to disgust, and I made up my mind to cross the sea and tell everything to get my revenge on her!"

"Annie!" the old lady exclaimed, reproachfully; but her agitation was so excessive that she could get no further, and lay back helplessly in her chair, regarding the irate maid with a sort of meek terror.

"Mrs. Lisle, you had a son once, hadn't you?—a wild boy that broke his young wife's heart, and then went abroad to sow his wild oats. You didn't know he was dead, did you?"

"Dead! Oh, Edgar!" and with the heart-wringing cry of a mother bereaved, Mrs. Lisle fell back in her chair, her eyes shut, her face dead-white.

Little Annie chafed the cold hands and applied her silver-stoppered vial-grette to the nose of the fainting woman.

Nothing Did Good

Until She Tried "Fruit-a-tives"

Madame Rioux is the wife of M. Jos. Rioux, a wealthy manufacturer of lumber in St. Moise. Madame Rioux is greatly interested in her home town and her testimonial in favor of "Fruit-a-tives" carries conviction with it, as it is entirely unsolicited.

St. Moise, Quebec.

I have much pleasure in testifying to the marvelous good which I have received from the use of the famous tablets "Fruit-a-tives". I was a great sufferer for many years with serious liver disease and severe constipation. I had constant pain in the right side and in the back and these pains were severe and distressing. My digestion was very bad, with frequent headaches, and I became greatly run down in health. I took many kinds of liver pills and liver medicine without any benefit, and I was treated by several doctors but nothing did me any good, bloating continued. As soon as I began to take "Fruit-a-tives" I began to feel better, the dreadful pains in the right side and in the back were easier and when I had taken three boxes I was practically well. 150 (Sgd) MADAME JOSEPH RIOUX. "Fruit-a-tives" — or "Fruit Liver Tablets" are sold by dealers at 50c a box — 6 for $2.50 — or will be sent on receipt of price. Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

BIG DEAL IN FARM LANDS.

Sale of 100,000 Acres is Reported at Winnipeg.

Winnipeg, Feb. 14.—The sale of 100,000 acres of farm lands belonging to the Canadian Northern Railway is reported here by the purchaser being a large land company with headquarters in St. Paul. The price is understood to be $10 per acre which is considered a good figure. Confirmation of the deal cannot be obtained to-night, as the officials who are supposed to know all about it are not at present in the city. The transaction is in line, however, with several other large deals in farm lands which have taken place within the past few weeks, and there is every reason to believe that it has actually been consummated.

The American railroads which were formerly active in the promotion of Canadian landseekers' excursions are again busy with this field. They diverted their attention from western Canada last spring in order to boost the Texas lands, but the scheme was not successful. They are now arranging to give the former cheap rates to land seekers, and there is little doubt that the coming spring will see a great rush of immigration from the agricultural States on the south of the boundary.

FINANCES SATISFACTORY.

Result of Examination of Winnipeg's Assets and Liabilities. Winnipeg, Man., Feb. 14.—With the exception of the fact that it has a large amount of unpaid debentures on hand the city's financial position is eminently satisfactory. This, in effect, was the statement made by Mayor Ashdown after receiving from F. A. Ross, who has been conducting a general audit of the city's books, a statement showing the liabilities and liquid assets of the city.

WRONGED HYNES.

HE DENIES THAT HE WEDDED 100 WIVES.

The Exact Number Was 32—Most Money He Got Was $4,000 From Woman He Married in Montreal in 1896.

London, Feb. 14.—The Evening News published to-day the first instalment of an autobiography of Arthur Hynes, or Hyne, the bigamist, who was sentenced yesterday at Bristol to seven years' penal servitude. In the autobiography, written by Hynes himself, he reads: "I give the real facts of all my wrongdoings."

The document shows that Hynes' real name is F. A. Scholz. Among the aliases he has borne are Weston and Witzloff. The headlines to the autobiography were written by Hynes himself, and read: "Witzloff tells his life story."

"The man with 35 names and 32 (married) wives."

"Bigamy as a means of livelihood."

In a short preface the writer says there is no truth in the reports that he possessed 100 wives. He married only 32 women.

In his remarkable narrative Hynes says he was born in Neuchâtel, Switzerland, in 1864, and emigrated to the United States in 1881. He was apprenticed to dentistry in Philadelphia. Afterward he practiced with an associate. Both were arrested for malpractice and placed under bonds of $5,000 each. It was the friend who provided Scholz's bond who suggested marriage as a means of repaying the writer. Scholz then gave a list of the many women he married, secured all the money he could, and then abandoning them, the victims, sometimes on the day after marriage.

When he returned to Europe he continued to seek fresh wives. The father of one of his Italian wives discovered his son-in-law's guilt, and the two fought with daggers. The bigamist was stabbed twice. Afterward he returned to New York and started practicing on Lexington avenue. Thence he went to St. Louis, Washington, Chicago, Detroit, Cincinnati, Montreal, Minneapolis, Milwaukee, Toronto and elsewhere, defrauding women whenever he found an opportunity. The most money he obtained from any of his wives was from his first wife, named Russell, and whom he married in Montreal in 1896. He got $4,000 from her.

Lord Coleridge, when sentencing Hynes, said: "In the case you have pleaded guilty to there are no mitigating circumstances. You have defrauded those who have trusted you. You have seduced and betrayed confiding women. You have made victims out of your greed and of your lust."

There was a pathetic scene after Hynes was removed to the cell when the nature of the sentence was conveyed to Mrs.

Weston (nee Bell), who, so far as is known, is the man's legitimate wife. She quite collapsed. "Come to me, little Biemie," she said despairingly to her baby of two years. "They've sent your daddy away for seven years."

"Poor daddy!" sobbed the youngster and buried his head in his mother's lap.

THE SNELL CASE.

Judge is Moved by Friend's Wife's Shame.

Clinton, Ill., Feb. 14.—When the trial of the $2,000,000 suit instituted by Richard Snell to break the will of his father, Colonel Thomas Snell, was resumed to-day more love letters written by the aged millionaire were introduced in evidence. The letters were read to the jury, and spectators crowded forward craning their necks to catch every word. It is said the purpose of reading the letters is to show that the colonel was insane about women.

Most of the letters read to-day are signed simply "Your own little girl," and the others bear no signature. They are admitted in evidence as having been written by Mrs. Laura Hamilton, wife of Rev. E. A. Hamilton, who was pastor of the Methodist Church, at Newman, Ill. Mrs. Hamilton is a daughter of Philip Wolfe, of Clinton, a retired business man of means. The letters express the ardent love of the writer for the aged millionaire, and invariably couple the prostration of affection with the request for money.

Soon after the beginning of the trial the connection of Rev. Hamilton and his wife with the case became public, the Rev. Hamilton resigned his pastorate at Newman. Immediately the couple went away. While their destination is not known, it is believed they went to Florida.

It is rumored that Mrs. Hamilton has suffered from nervous prostration because of the exposure of the letters, and Judge Cochran, who is hearing the case, and who is an ordained Methodist minister and circuit rider, and the lifelong friend of Rev. Hamilton, sat with averted face as the letters were read to the jury.

LEAVING FOR ENGLAND.

Mr. C. M. Hays to Interview Grand Trunk Directors.

Montreal, Feb. 14.—Mr. Charles M. Hays, of the Grand Trunk, leaves for England to-morrow, sailing from New York. Mr. Hays generally makes a trip to London in the spring, but this year he has gone somewhat earlier than usual. It is understood in official circles that his object in doing so was to place before Sir Redvers Wilson and the members of the London board the position of the company and the plans he has in view for economizing expenditure in view of the falling off in receipts since the beginning of the year. Several Grand Trunk Pacific matters also render Mr. Hays' presence desirable in London, one of them being the forth-
