AROUND THE WORLD.

A Mr. Frank Herman of London, G. B., has just finished a tour of 106,000 miles. The following are notes by the way. The fellow is an infidel and a scoffer, but his notes are interesting.

From London, he said, I went to France, passed down through Spain and Portugal to Gibraltar, over into Morocco, Algiers and Corunna. Went down into the country a short distance, thence to Malta and Port Said, passed through the Suez Canal to Brindisi, and thence by train through the deserts to Cairo, Alexandria and the Pyramids. At Alexandria I viewed Cleopatra's Needle, which is now in New York, and mused for quite a time as to how the beautiful pearl-drinking Queen manipulated it in sewing buttons on an oyster's trousers. Taking a day's rest in Cairo, I spent 21 days on the Nile, the pleasantest ever passed. The weather was delightful, and it seemed, to stretch one's limbs in the shade of the broad sail, that care was banished to another world, and the millennium of contentment was setting in. Along the banks, in the rich fields, the natives were working just as they did, and with tools after the same pattern, ages ago. Occasionally I would see a farmer irrigating his land with a pigskin full of water on his back, a thin stream escaping from the nozzle, its flow being governed by his broad fingers. The most interesting guide-book I found during those twenty-one days was the Bible. Journeying to Suez by train again about Christ- mas, I saw the first snowfall seen in that city for a score of years. After being patiently collected from the roof, it was placed in a flower vase, and occupied a prominent position on the dinner table. The weather was unusually severe for that climate.

I then visited the site where Moses is supposed to have led the children of Israel across the Red Sea. Though gazed on the waters for an hour, I could not deem Moses a great general. At ebb-tide the water is very narrow and very shallow, something like a half mile in width and three feet in depth. At other times the depth is considerably greater. My opinion of the matter is that Moses marched the children across between tides, and that Pharaoh did not arrive until the tide changed; then the water was of some depth, and he met with disaster. The total depth of the sea at that point is three miles at high water. At Mecca I found thousands of fanatic Mussulman pilgrims who had gathered for the purpose of kissing the supposed graves of Mohammed, Adam and Eve. The poor wretches believe that the pilgrimage to Mecca once made, they are proof against punishment in the hereafter, no matter the number or enormity of their crime. A drought prevailed there, and at Arden, where a monster tank with a capacity of 3,000,000 gallons had been erected three years before, there never had been rain enough to fill it. Condensed sea water sold readily at sixpence a gallon. Crossing the borders of Arabia I sailed over the Arabian Ocean to Bombay, and up to Carouchee, a thriving new port. Sailing up the Persian Gulf to Bagdad, I found fever prevailing to so great an extent that I returned to Carouchee, and went by rail 900 miles to Jaylum, the terminus of the India Railway. I took a camel then and went through Khyber Pass to Kabul, returning to India. I visited in turn the Isle of Ceylon, Colombo, Adam's Peak, Calcutta, Lahore, Lucknow and all the principal cities of India. At the city of Benares, on the Ganges, there are 4,000 temples, the golden temple being the finest in the world. The roof and sides are covered with sheets of gold and precious stones, and when the natives come to worship they have their hands filled with gold-leaf, and as they pray they press it to the walls, adding greatly to the thickness and value. On entering the Golden Temple I found nothing but blind animals—bullocks, dogs and monkeys—and the atmosphere was fetid. Taking care of such brutes is the insipid system of charity indulged in by the people. The most wonderful sight I ever witnessed was the great festival on the River Ganges. For ten miles the city was aglare with lights. Every man participates in the festival and furnishes lights, according to his position in life. A prince will contribute a thousand, and the poorest of the poor at least one. Chartering a steam launch, I passed several hours on the river, and as the night was pitch dark the scene was one never to be forgotten. The bodies of all persons dying for a fortnight before were burned that night on the river bank. From that point I journeyed rapidly to the great tea district of India, through the Himalayas, British Burmah, and to Rangoon, which well boasts one of the finest pagodas extant. It is said to stand two feet higher than St. Paul's Church London, and its monster bell has cast upon its sides the entire Buddha table. I visited Hong Kong, Shanghai, Peking, went up the river Yang-tse-kiang and to the borders of Russia, down by the Great Wall through the Inland Sea, where the finest scenery in the world is spread out to view, to Yeddo I was well pleased with Japan and the general simplicity of its people. Its state of morals, though, should afford a fine field for missionary work.

A DOCTOR'S HEROISM AT MAIWAND.

When will a full and accurate account of the battle of Maiwand be written? Passing interests is revived by the court martial at Bombay; but unless some detailed story is soon published the historian of the future will have but few facts on which to enlarge. Many heroic deeds are unquestionably done; but the heroes are unknown to name, chiefly because the despatches were badly written, and the action was a defeat and a victory. The story has reached us and which, even so late in the days still worth telling. The Aghans were allowed to approach so near to the British line of defence that shot and shell fell even into the field hospital tents, where the surgeons were busy at work dressing the wounded men. In one of these tents Surgeon E. A. Roe, Army Medical Department, was attending to a British soldier whose leg had been shattered by a shell. It was just at this time that the troops broke and the retreat began; and Dr Roe, looking up from his work, found that he was alone with his charge in the tent. He then saw the Aghans were in the midst of our men, and were plainly masters of the field. With true heroism he determined to save the wounded man, if possible, and hitting him in his arm he carried him into the open. A mob of camels and baggage animals were close by, and for these Dr Roe made, hoping to place the man on a spare camel. The Aghans cavalry were, however, too close, and they were quickly in the midst of the animals, cutting down the drivers and looting the baggage. The wretched survivors and followers dodged among the beasts to save themselves, and many escaped by these tactics. Dr Roe dragged the soldier along, and by keeping in the thick of the press saved himself from the Aghans, who were soon too busy engaged with their looting to follow far in pursuit. Eventually he came upon the chaplain (whose name we are sorry to say, has not been sent to us), and with us aid the wounded man was carried still farther away from the enemy. The soldier died in their arms, and they were forced to leave his body in order to provide for their own safety. Dr Roe presently overtook his syle leading his horse away, the man having been told that his master had been killed. This good fortune enabled the brave surgeon, already almost exhausted by his hard struggle, to overtake the brigade, then in full retreat. It is too late to ask that some official recognition should be made of the incident described above? The facts could be verified by the authorities.

MOTHERS! MOTHERS! MOTHERS!

Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with the excruciating pain of cutaneous eruptions? If so, go at once and get a bottle of Dr. Winslow's Soothing Syrup. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, there is no mistake about it; there is not a mother on earth who has ever used it, who will not tell you at once that it will regulate the bowels, give rest to the mother, and relief and health to the child, and bring the mother to her usual state in all cases, and pleasant to the taste, and is the prescription of one of the oldest and most eminent physicians in the United States, who has prescribed it for over 50 years. It is a most valuable medicine, and is sold in all the principal cities of the United States. It is a most valuable medicine, and is sold in all the principal cities of the United States.
