"Jack's" Visit to "Tommy."

Jellico's Men Tour the Trenches—Men-o-War's Men Call on Men of War on Land—A Dear Little Dugout in France.

(From the London Chronicle.)
(Our correspondent at British Headquarters sends a very interesting account of the impressions given to a party from the British fleet, to whom Admiral Jellicoe had granted the privilege of visiting the fighting front on the Continent, in order to give the Navy a nearer view of the work being done by the army. It would be no less interesting to see a party of soldiers who have gone through the experiences of trench life and the Loos or Ypres fights conducted round some of the watchful ships of our fleet.)
By "The Daily Chronicle" Special Correspondent, Philip Gibbs.
British Headquarters, Dec. 13.—When the wind howls over the flats of Flanders and booms like the rumbling of distant guns our soldiers often say to each other: "Pretty rough on the fellows at sea! What a time they must be having in the Fleet!"
The Fleet does not express the state of its soul, and one can only guess the hardships of the seamen in this dirty weather. Hardly a word breaks the silence in which they live in their unknown whereabouts. Yet the other when on the way to the front line they went slithering and stumbling in mud which reached the upper edge of their top boots.

And gradually their eyes were opened to the reality of things when they saw that, so far from having a soft job, our soldiers are living in conditions of discomfort and peril which need great strength of endurance and patience, as well as great courage.
Shells came screaming overhead, and they found themselves nakedly exposed to the enemy's fire over certain trenches, where the communication trenches have silted in after the heavy rains. Rain slashed down upon all the soldiers who were going up with the night reliefs, and they were wet and muddy scarecrows before they reached the front line, where they had to stand in mud not far from the enemy over the way. The dugouts were not so full of comfort as Jack had imagined.
It was very cold in the night, so cold that the men could hardly get a grip on their rifles, and out of the dank mist came whizz-bang and pipe-squeaks, and other nasty, noisy things with threats of death. The guns on each side were busy through the night and the shells were rushing overhead like express trains through Clapham Junctions on Derby Day.
In their first experience of the trenches Jack was awestruck by the life of soldiers who live in dirty ditches and in muddy holes, under all that tumult of explosives, and take it all cheerfully as a matter of course. Their comments afterwards were amusing. They had been extremely uncomfortable, but enjoyed the novelty of the adventure.
Casualty Roll.
"We were in action all night, sir," said one of them to the General who questioned them, and who smiled at his answer—because there was no "action," as soldiers call it, but only the ordinary "strafing" between the lines.
"We had one casualty," said another bluejacket.

The General was surprised and alarmed. He had hoped that his naval guests had escaped without a scratch.
"One casualty?"
"Yes, sir. One of our dug-outs was hit by a piece of shell."
There was a general agreement among all the seamen that after all life in the trenches is not so soft a job as they had imagined, and that there is more comfort on a battleship even in dirty weather. They were amazed at the high spirits of the men, and there is no doubt that they will take back to the Fleet a vivid story of the pluck with which the "land-lubbers" carry on in their wet ditches.
Truly all this rain has made the front a quagmire which only the high spirits of our fighting men could suffer without complaint. Some camps which I visited yesterday were so muddy that if one stepped off the "duck-walks" or boarded pathways, one went ankle-deep.
In a bad place outside one of the camps a man who had missed his way nearly disappeared altogether. He sank up to his chin in mud—it was pitch-dark at the time—and his frantic yells brought a rescue party which saved him after he had abandoned hope.
In another spot a wagon drawn by two horses became stuck in the mud and one of the poor beasts fell from heart failure after desperate efforts to drag the load out of this morass. The other horse was pulled down and was drowned in the mud.
These, of course, are exceptional incidents, and the camps are not as uncomfortable as such episodes suggest. In spite of the mud the board-tents are kept clean and dry, and men who have been wading in wet trenches come back to them gladly and sit round their braziers in that delightful state of "rag" which is dear to the heart of the soldier, and sailor, too.
Gay Gordons.
So I found the Gordons yesterday, laughing, whistling and singing, as they lined up before the cook-house with their billy-cans, and sat with their bare knees in the glow of the brazier fires. In leather jerkins, with aprons over their kilts, and yellow mud on their gaiters, they looked a fine and hardy set of boys, and neither war or weather had damped their spirits.
Outside in the field stood a lonely piper, playing music so melancholy that it might have drawn tears from the cows in the neighboring paddock. But he was obviously enjoying himself and not all his long-drawn wails had any sad effect upon the spirits of the young Gordons, who were eating their mid-day meal with the salt of Highland feasts.
The seamen who have gone back to the North Sea Fleet, having seen these things, will be able to tell your naval defenders that Tommy is a wonder.

Artillery in the Alps.

All sorts of out-of-the-way and often unexpected difficulties are met by the Italian troops in the fight against the Austrians. Several fights, for instance, have taken place at heights between 7,000 and 10,000 feet above sea level.
At these great heights the ordinary gun sights are useless. The higher the altitude the rarer the air becomes and farther a gun will shoot. Most of the gun sights are made for and tested at practically sea level, so the Italian gunners in the Alps would have found that their guns were not shooting accurately, if special gun sights had not been used.
A shell at 5,000 feet up, for instance, which at the ordinary level would travel 2,500 yards would go 2,500 yards, while at 7,500 feet altitude it would be going 2,500 yards, or 100 yards further than it ought to go.
All the Italian mountain guns, therefore, have to have specially corrected sights. We have, of course, used similar mountain guns in India and other places, but there has never been a campaign waged at such a height as the one between the Italians and Austrians.

Is Life Worth It Depends Upon

Wrong living is the cause of generally stomach and liver troubles. Tea and coffee drinking digestive disorder, but it is time to fully realize it. If or coffee with seeming ease of the digestive organs and irritability, and other symptoms, it's time for the Postum Cereal.

For any tea or coffee that is wrong, but doesn't know quit both the tea and coffee.

POSTUM

Made of wheat and Postum has a rich, snappy, fine (the drug in tea and coffee).

There are two forms of Postum Cereal must be boiled in boiling water and can be made kinds are equally delicious and the same.

A change from tea or coffee to Postum is a right living.
