THE DELCO Electric Plant

FOR OUT-OF-TOWN LIGHTING.

"DELCO LIGHT" consists of an air-cooled engine which will operate on gasoline or kerosene, directly connected to an electric generator and switchboard, on which are the necessary controlling instruments. These are all enclosed in one unit and may be called the Generating Unit.

The second unit is the Storage Battery, consisting of sixteen glass or rubber jar cells for 32 volt equipment. The engine is self-cranking, when the starting lever is held up electricity flows from the storage battery through the field coils and armature. This electric energy is conducted to the incandescent lamps by means of copper wires to any position desired.

The lights do not, as a rule, require the entire output of the Generator, so the excess is taken up and stored by the Storage Battery. When the engine stops the storage battery is used as the source of supply, after which it is necessary to run the engine again to re-charge the battery. It may only be necessary to run the engine two or three times a week when used to light a residence, but when used in stores, or where considerable current is used the engine has to be run more frequently. It can be used to light your church, residence, barns, wharf, store or mill. The operation is simple, and the cost of running, very low.

We are Agents for the "Delco" Electric Plant, and we have a staff of electricians who will make installations in any part of the Island. If you are interested, write us for descriptive booklet and our estimate of the cost. We will be pleased to give you any information you require.

Genuine "Forgeries"

A Shakespearean Discovery that the Scholars Maligned.

Among the many literary forgeries which have confounded critics and shed a lurid light upon the fallibility of experts those known as the "Cunningham Forgeries" are the most remarkable. For when they were discovered after over two hundred years of oblivion scholars immediately accepted them as a settlement of many disputed questions about Shakespeare's plays.

Then they were denounced as forgeries and their evidence rejected by all authorities for nearly fifty years. Then, at last, chemical and microscopic tests proved they were genuine. Now they hold high place among British national treasures in the Record Office, London.

In 1842, the Shakespeare Society issued a volume entitled "Extracts from the accounts of the Revels at Court." It was written by Peter Cunningham, an Audit Office Clerk who was known as a contributor to the Shakespeare Society's publications, and in it he explained how he had found the Accounts Books of the Revels Office for 1604-5 and 1611-12 in the vaults under Somerset House.

These accounts recorded payments made for Court performances of Measure for Measure, A Winter's Tale, Othello and The Tempest, and the publication was accepted as having finally settled all disputes as to the date of these plays. Before the publication many authorities had maintained that Othello was written in 1611, but these accounts proved that it was produced at Court in 1604. The Tempest, generally supposed to be the work of 1612-13, was shown to have been performed in 1611.

Some time after the publication of this work, Cunningham gave way to drink, and he was retired from the Audit Office in 1858. Ten years later impoverished and broken in health, he offered to sell to Sir Frederick Madden, Keeper of Manuscripts at the British Museum, the originals of these Accounts Books. As he had no right to them they were impounded.

Then all the experts were once more thrown into confusion by the announcement that the entries referring to Shakespeare's plays were forgeries! In 1869 the "British Quarterly" asserted that "it only required a glance of the experts to discover that the list of Shakespeare's plays performed before the Court had been appended to the old documents by a modern hand."

Dyce and Halliwell Phillips, two of the greatest authorities of the day, accepted this conclusion, and writers in America, Germany, and other countries agreed to describe the entries as the "Cunningham Forgeries."

The blunder seems to have had its origin in a letter written by Mr. Bond, Assistant Keeper of Manuscripts in the British Museum, who, when he sent the documents to the Master of the Rolls in 1868, stated that he had reasons for doubting the authenticity of one, at least, of the papers, from the peculiar character of the writing and the spelling.

Peter Cunningham's well-known failing and his association with John Payne Collier, who was notorious as a forger of old documents, were, no doubt, partly responsible for the readiness with which forgery was generally assumed. But Cunningham had published the play lists in the book issued years before he gave way to drink or met Collier.

For forty-three years the error remained unchallenged. Then Mr. Ernest Law, an eminent authority, made a careful examination of the old accounts and proved the entries to be genuine.

He suggested scientific tests. Microscopic examination showed that the ink in which the entries were made exactly resembled that used for the rest of the accounts, and that it had made the same effect upon the paper. This meant that the entire book had been written at the same time. A chemical test, made in a Government laboratory, showed that only one kind of ink had been used throughout the accounts, and such ink has not been made for many generations.

In the face of such evidence, differences in handwriting and such eccentricities as the spelling of the dramatist's name as "Shaxberd" are of no consequence, so the clerk was most unjustly maligned.

The ideal assortment of toilet preparations for a short vacation will be found in the THREE FLOWERS Travellette selling for fifty cents at all Drug and Dept. Stores.—June 29, m.t.f.

Household Notes.

If you want to melt a small amount of butter, use an aluminum soup ladle.

Shrimp timbales are nice served on buttered toast with mock Hollandaise sauce.

When boiling carrots add one spoonful each of vinegar and sugar to the water.

Add left-over creamed ham or dried beef or eggs and stir in individual ramekins.

When making filling for lemon custard pie, add a cupful of chopped, cooked prunes.

Daily baths with solutions of salt or boracic acid water are recommended for ivy poison.

Before it is frozen hard, add some crumbled macaroons to fresh peach ice cream.

Sweetbread cutlets are particularly good when served with brown or tomato sauce.

A bottle of sugar syrup can be kept on hand in the refrigerator for mixing cold drinks.

Serve vanilla ice cream on rounds of canned pineapple, with a sauce made from the sirup.
