CARTER MEDICINE CO., New York. Small Pill. Small Dose. Small Price.

A Romance of Chelsea Village and East Hampton Town.

And yet Mr. Leete was as much pleased as was his wife when, in July, a letter came from Mrs. Wykoff, at East Hampton, came from Mrs. Wykoff, at East Hampton, nviting Celia to spend a few weeks at the Wykoff homestead.

"You will have a dull time," she wrote, "for I am still something of an invalid, and, of course, we see no one; but my nicces—I call them so—are spending the summer with me, and they and Randolph will do what they can to make it pleasant for you. Write me that you will come, and Parker, my faithful factotum, will call for you and make you comfortable on your journey."

was attracted to Stephen's, sitting weazened and hent corner of the car, and they and Randolph will do what they can to make it pleasant for you. Write me that you will come, and Parker, my faithful factotum, will call for you and make you comfortable on your icarney."

Even Alonzo felt some tender stirrings towards merey in the depths of his stern soul; and Dorinda gave it as her opinion that Celia could adequately display her self-respect and senso of independence by delaying her answer for the space of twenty-four hours.

As it took poor Celia that time to prepare a missive sufficiently lofty in tone to pass the family conclave, Dorinda had her own way, and, being placated, entered with an interest only too active and energetic into the preparation of her sister's paraphernalia.

PART III.

Dorinda threw herself upon the task of preparing Celia for the fray with a zeal and ardor that brought only dismay to her younger sister's breast. It having been decided that the victim of society must have some new gowns, Dorinda at once planned a wardrobe of variegated brilliancy. Celia strove with all her tact for a more modest working, but she had to stand up and do battle-royal for her own standards when Dorinds wanted her to purchase a certain "Dame Trot" garment, of a pattern which was at the time exciting the irreversal attention of the press. They came to an open rupture. Celia finally appealed to the head of the house, who decided, with makeuline justice, that she was entitled to choose her clothes for her self. Dorinda writhed; but came back to the fascinating employment more in sorrow than in anger.

When the little trunk was at last packed, Dorinda's verdict on the contents was that they were good enough, but had no sorr of skyle about them. Celia, doubtful of their she are good enough, but had no sorr of skyle about them. Celia, doubtful of their she are good enough, but had no sorr of skyle about them. When the little trunk was at last packed, Dorinda's verdict on the contents was that they were good enough, but had no sort of sayle about them. Celia, doubtful of their possessing lany merits at all, took a negative comfort from this. Ah! if she could only gather an idea of Mrs. Wykoff's likes from Dorinda's dislikes!

only gather an idea of Mrs. Wykoff's likes from Dorinda's dislikes!

The day came when Mrs. Wykoff's maid was to convey her charge to the futher shore of Long Island. This relegation of Celia to a menial's care had somewhat troubled the family conclave; but it had been decided that, in view of the differences in social ethics revealed by past dealings with the Wykoff family, it would be fair to assume that the lady's intent was respectful, however much her course was open to the criticism of the right-minded. The sun was shining on the mid-day dinner when the carriage was announced; Celia had finished a nervous attempt at a meal, and was ready for the ordeal. Five napkins fell to the ground, and amid a storm of caresses and tears Celia was hustled to the door. Even Alonzo shook her hand with a stern cordiality which hinted that, under favorable circumstances, all might yet be forgiven. Her father kissed her brow, and in a minute she was in the carriage—the Wykoff carriage—with Parker.

Parker.
Parker was a Briton, and she stood by Farker was a Briton, and she stood by her colors. Long years before, when her firm but kindly rule over Mrs. Wykoff was just beginning, her employer made one single effort to treat her as an American.

"Your name is Jane, I believe?" she said; "I will call you Jane, I think, hereafter, instead of Parker."

Jane Parker dropped an old-world court-esy, and set her thin lips. "Indeed, mum, I would not be that disrespectful to my betters; and I ope, mum, you will not insist. Mrs. Wykoit, did not insist, and Parker remained Parker.

The carriage rolled away, and Celia teething.

leaned back in her corner and felt a delicious glow of yearning fright and mysterious hope. Opposite her sat Parker, bold upright, an eminently respectable guide to the gates of Elysium. Beyond her, through the windows, Celia saw the silver W tossing on the rounded flanks of the Wykoff horses.

on the rounded flanks of the Wykoff horses. At the railroad station—or the correlacilled by that name—Stephen met them, Mrs. Wykoff's aged but efficient butler and general manager—the masculine equivalent of Farker. Here they were taken under the wing of that vigilance of which an accomplished servitor like Stephen makes a pride. Celia did nothing for herself she was not even sure that she had used her own means of locomotion when she found perself seated in the best seat in the car, Parker close behind her, her light wrap and a little satchel on the seat by her side, and a monthly magazine on her lap.

She had not thought of taking a book with her and she did not even know that for this delicate attention she was indebted to Stephen's own inspiration. Later she learned of the conscientions care he had given to the selection. He felt it his duty to report his exercise of discretion to Mrs. Wykoff.

"Seeing her unprovided, ma'am," he explained, "I felt that I might go so far. I would not take the responsibility of choosing what a young lady should read, but I had seen that particular paper here on your own table, ma'am, and I run through it on the news-stand to see that there was no mudity pictures nor anything that you could object to, ma'am."

Celia hardly glanced at her magazine. She was too full of a new and sweet content to care to read any other woman's love-story. She looked out of the window, and was interested in the landscape. Perhaps no one else ever cared to look at that dull, flat country, divided between swampiness and aridity; but Celia gazed at it with an indulgence that had in it a touch of proprietorship. Most of the time, however, it pleased her to lean back in her seat and sense the guardianship of her lover's emissaries. It was as though the ægis of her Prince of the Golden World was stretched out over her. She had discovered Stephen sitting unobtrusively at the furthest end of the car, watching her with a steady eye that took in all her surroundings, her every movement. She half lifted her hand toward the window—he was at her side in an instant, and had raised the sash. She drew back a little from the draught—Parker silently slipped her wrap over her shoulders. At one of the stations a tail, handsome young man entered and wandered down the aisle, looking for a seat. His eye fell on the empty place next to heres then as if lured by some strange. His eye fell on the empty place next to hers; then, as if lured by some strange magnetism, that youthful masculine eye was attracted to Stephen's, sitting weazened and bent in the far corner of the car, and "The girls?" queried Celia.
