BULLET-HOLES IN THEM.

The Remains of Ten Men Unearthed-

Pierre, S. D., March 22.—While workmen were excavating yesterday on the bluff north of Capital Hill they unearthed the remains of ten human beings which had apparently been thrown into a pit and covered with stones and dirt. Six of the skulls were of white men, one of a white woman and the others of Indians. Bullet holes were found in five of them. The head of the woman had been crushed with a hatchet. An arrow head was found in the breastbone of an Indian skeleton.

Nothing was found to identify the remains except a silver medallion dated 1847, bearing the name of Henry MacKenzie on the reverse side, and an inscription noting that the wearer was at the battle of Buena Vista. Col. Joe Reid, a famous scout among the Sioux for 45 years, was PIERRE, S. D., March 22.-While work-

He started out with a party consisting of his wife, four men and several Indians to go to Fort Benton from old Fort George, twelve miles from the river. The party never arrived at Fort Benton, and no trace of them ever was found. They were doubtless butchered by the Sioux.

moved the abolition of hereditary representatives in Parliament. He said the democracy had become a reality. Hereditary peers were in fatal and eternal antagonism with the democracy. The people would not long tolerate the idea of several hundreds of men born with the privilege to interfere with the Government and to legislate as a class. The House had the spectacle before it of men excluded from the Jockey Club and warned off the race courses and yet able to interfere with the legislation of the nation.

London, March 22.—In the course of yesterday's debate in the House of Lords, Baron Herschell attacked the one-sided character of Lord Salisbury's speech in referring only to the charges on which the Parnellites were found guilty and omitting mention of the graver charges on which they were acquitted. The Government, he said, had constituted a new court, creating it by political means, to try political opsaid, had constituted a new court, creating it by political means, to try political opponents, and even this court has been constrained to clear the Parnellites on all but charges which the Government did not dare to invoke the infliction of a practical polity. The verdict of public opinion was on the side of the Parnellites now; and when the story of the episode was fully written on the pages of history, the praise and the blame would be awarded in a very different fashion from the way in which they were awarded by Lord Salisbury. Condemnation would not rest upon the Parnellites, but would concentrate upon their accusers.

Lord Kimberley said that the whole case Lord Kimberley said that the whole case was pivoted upon the forgeries, and it was only just to record that the charges based thereon had collapsed. He thought Lord Salisbury lacked generosity and cruelly treated a man whom he considered fit to stopped at the Stafford House, where Mr. and Mrs. Birchall, Benwell and Pelly stopped on their arrival here on Feb. 16, and from where Birchall and Benwell started together on the morning of Feb. 17 on that fateful journey to the Blenheim swamp. Mr. Murray came here to trace back the line of Birchall's movements, and to make available at the trial certain interesting evidence.

It will be remembered that Birchall, on Thursday, Feb. 27, sent a dispatch from Bufialo, himself at Niagara Falls, and signed it "Stafford," as if coming from the Stafford House. The purpose of the bogus telegram is supposed to have been to substantiate statements made by Birchall at Niagara Falls and to induce Pelly to start on that wild goose chase to New York after Benwell. Murray heard the statements of Stafford House people, and then gave it as his unhesitating opinion that Birchall had sent the telegram to himself. The original of the dispatch is in the possession of Manager Burnett, of the Great Northwestern Telegraph Company here, and is carefully guarded, and will be produced at the trial. Murray, being interviewed by a reporter said: "I shall go to New York in a few guarded, and will be produced at the trial.

"I have not the slightest doubt of it. Only yesterday I received some very important evidence on this point. I got a letter from a gentleman in New York—a very prominent business man—speaking of five young Englishmen who, to his knowledge, came to this country to become farm pupils. Two of them disappeared at Niagara Falls. They gave directions to have their letters sent to the Falls for two weeks, but their letters were never called for, and the two young men have never been heard from since that. I know that Birchall has been out to this country sevbeen heard from since that. I know that Birchall has been out to this country several times, and I have very little doubt that he is one of a gang of conspirators who were leagued to first rob and then murder their victims. Besides looking up Birchall's movements in New York I shall investigate the statement of the New York business man, and perhaps may be compelled to continue the investigation in England."

"Then it may be said that you are not working on Birchall's case alone?"

"That is true," Murray answered. "I am working on both ends of the case now.

There may be some surprising developments."

When the English party were leaving for the Falls on Feb. 18 the clerk of the Stafford House asked Birchall where he intended stopping at the Falls, with the idea of advising him of a good place to stop. "Oh, that is all right," returned Birchall, briskly. "I have a place down there."

Murray is still firmly convinced that Mrs. Birchall was cognizant of her husband's intention to dispoil his victims of their money, though he will not go the length of saying that she was in a conspiracy to murder. The manner in which she coincided in many of her husband's statements strengthens the conviction in the mind of the detective. He says Birchall is the coolest and most wonderful man he ever saw. he ever saw.
