As long as the inspector is satisfied that the party has a dog or had one since the beginning of the year no excuse will be taken in place of the dol-lar. One of the worst cases he has had to handle was of a woman who called at his office yesterday. She stood at the railing which serves to keep the public on the outside, and for twenty minutes said things to the in-spector. She tried to convince him that the dog found on her premises was not hers—never belonged to her—having followed her home from a hotel. It had remained with her for a time, but she did not want it any more, alhough she was not going to take it back to a hotel, for she did not like to be seen going into such a place. When at last she saw that there was no way out of paying the tax she said she did not want the dog, which she had brought to the office with hele to go with her a foot further, and she
