A Torpede Bast Fearfully trackies as a Fear These Craft to be of any use?

From The St. James's Gesets.

The Standard's correspondent at Berchaven gives an account of the voyage from Portland to Berchaven of the torpede gunboat Sanday. This vessel and her sister boats, it may be atated, are supposed to combine assworthiness and great speed with vast power of destruction. She is only 8 feet deep, 28 feet beam, 200 feet long, and 420 tons burden. She is rated as a 19-knut boat, and capable of steaming 3000 miles and mere as ten knots without coaling. The correspondent says:

"Let me record something about the capacity of this apecies of craft to inflict torture upon the servants of the Queen. From the statement of her officers, it seems that in the light weather we had all the way from Portland, while the Hurcules moved with the least possible motion, the Sandity putched and rolled so violently that the pendulum intended to register the healing of the vessel proved useless. It registers only thirty degrees on either side, and the Sandity rolled nearly forty-five, the pendulum striking from side to side. The ship's company to a man were as sick as man never were before. One man finally vomited blood, and the best of them thad barely the beartleft to stand at their posts, seamen and cers alternating at the lee rail in misery.

"On the bridge, which is as high as the funnels, the seas dashed up as they do against a cliff, lashing the salt wash into the syes of those on watch until cayenne pepper could not have made them, smart more. In a cliff, lashing the salt wesh into the eyes of those on watch until cayenne pepper could not have made; thom smart more. In fact, one man had his eyes baudaged. Forward of this bridge no man can go, for it is as freely under water as the bows of a cayek; and the 4-inch breechloader that stands there might as well be a champeane bottle for any harm it sould do an enemy while the vessel is under way. This was most conclusively shown on the journey hither, for the Warspite was chased and over hauled by the Amphion of the other ficet, and would surely have been sent to the bottom had actual war existed, for the Amphion steamed easily her fifteen knots high out of the water, while the Sanddy could make but any knots on the waves, and then rolled and pitched so that fighting of any kind was totally out of the COPPERINE ighting of any kind was totally out of the question.

"That she can neither make speed nor fight at sea is evident, and, what is worse, it is, in the mind of her officers, an even chance whether on any open sea distance she would reach her destination. This short ran has so battered her that ever time we have been here she has been undergoing repairs. Her machinery has all the intricacy of clockwork, with much of its fragility. The slightest imperfection anywhere disables her, and not one on board was sanguing enough to think she could float long unless she could keep her head to the sea. Her deck is so close to the water that you can sit and dip your toes in the water over the side, as was the case in the ariginal monitors of the American navy; but, unlike those ressels, she has bulwarks that hold the water when it rashes over the side, and so destroy the ship's chance of freeing herself rapidly. So low is the vessel, so quick her rolling, and so high her bulwarks, that it would require but a few green seas in succession on board to swamp her effectively. What the boat can do un smooth water is no doubt great; but as a war vessel for general use she has proved a complete fealure." Proc. Aug. 37.—Wheat quiet, domand on off, holders offer moderately. Is It True that Van is Naturalized? From the New York Herald.

It is announced that President Van Horne wa Partisan Senate Trifles With Grave of the Canadian Pacific Railway, who reside The rejection of the Fisheries Treaty by the The rejection of the Fisheries Treaty by the United States Senate, foreshadowed by catous of the States Senate, foreshadowed by catous of the moting railway and commercial interests. Mr. van Horne became a subject of Queen Vio-Treaty itself and its terms, its merits and its defects, we have no concern in reaching the defects, we have no concern in reaching the conclusion that the action of the Republican majority was dictated by party considerations. The report of the majority of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations betrayed the determination of the Republicans to use the negotiation of the Treaty for campaign purposes, and the debate on the Treaty, the caticus action and the final vote confirm this view. The committee's report attempted to represent President Cleveland as having with sunster motive, saurped powers that did not belong to him in having appointed commissioners and negotiated a treaty without consulting the Senate, in face of the face that from the earliest days of the Republic this has been a customary proceeding. That contention could not stand after a brief examination of constitutional law and practice, yet it served as a prejudicing premise years ago, and is yet a comparatively young years ago, and is yet a comparatively young man. He was at different times superintendent of the Chicago and Alton and the Missouri-Pacific and the Joliet Ison and Steel Mills, and also was an official of the Wisconsin Central.

One day at Anniston, Ala., as I went down contention could not stand after a brief examination of constitutional law and practice, yet it served as a prejudicing premes upon which to base a disingenuous criticism of the Treaty itself. The majority report declared against any treaty negotiation what in the face of existing disputes as to the rights of American fishermen in Canadian waters, could only be retaliation, and, if necessary, war. In support of that report the Republican Senators were consolidated by caucus action, and voted as a unit against occurrence in the Treaty.

port of that report the Republican Senators were consolidated by caucus action, and voted as a unit against occurrence in the Treaty. Fortunately the people of both Great Britain and Canade understand emough about the exigencies of American presidential campaigns to know that this rejection of the Treaty is mainly a marter of internal politics; that the truculent tone adopted by some of the speakers is intended for political effect here, and that the American people are not so insensate as to look upon retaliation and war as the only remedies for a dispute with neighbors as to the meaning of the words of old treaties and the rights and privileges to be empoyed by the fishermes of New England. If there were no such understanding here and elsewhere the report of the Senate committee, followed by the majority vote of the Senate in rejecting the proposed Treaty, might lead to very serious complications, against all reason and in spite of the evident desire of the executive authorities of both Great Britain and the United States to reach "an amicable and final settle lement of a long standing controversy, productive of much irritation and misunderstanding between the two nations."
