completion of its thirteenth volume, wherein be announces his intention to discontinue the publication of that paper. We are extremely sorry that Mr. P. has been obliged to give up so valuable and useful a periodical, and which he has for many years conducted with much ability and industry. We learn from his address that this determination has been come to, not so much from a want of patronage, as from a delinquency of too many of his subscribers in paying their dues.—He says—The experience of the last three years in particular has confirmed us in the op which we were unwilling to admit, that the demands on us for money, for all the material necessary for us to carry on our business, were too great to be met, as the abominable and pernicious system of paying with orders was rapidly on the increase, and that mode of payment did not answer our purpose, as few or none of the articles required in our esta-blishment were imported into the country, and consequently were to be procured by from a distance, and paid for in Cash."

The New World has now been established but 2 years and a half and yet it boasts a larger circulation than any other weekly periodical in the United States. No week passes in which it is not greeted by sixty THOUSAND FRAMES.

This is owing to the high tone which it has maintained in Literature and Criticism, and to its avoidage of positive differences which it. its avoidance of political discussions, which either American or English, occupy a very con.
