

det articles will not include one by a Frenchman. Mr. Edmund Gosse treats the subject for England, and Friedrich Spielhagen for Germany. We are to suppose that Mr. Grant Allen's last hill-top utterance, from a super-Parnassian height, is not to pass without some humorous remonstrance, since Mr. Edouard Rod is announced to have a dialogue, "On the Evolution of the Idea of God," in the same number of "Cosmopolis." Mr. Henry James' satire on the editor who caters for a public that won't stand being told what it has stood, where matters of "delicacy" are concerned, comes to a conclusion. One is hoping that the editor will discover "just the really nice thing, the pleasant, right thing," of which he is in search. Further letters from John Stuart Mill to Gustave d'Eichthal will also appear.
