

The Commonwealth today is one international body which has succeeded in holding together perhaps better than any other. But it cannot be successful with the great extremes in its living standards which exists amongst its members. We must as quickly as possible try to even things up, and that is the main objective of this Colombo Plan. Once more gentlemen I plead with you to make it a success.

---

s/c