three-quarter millions of dollars had been spent on improvements. Was it fair, just or honest that these men should lose their property?

The bylaw should be repealed because 38,000 citizens had protested against it. This petition was presented to the Ontario Government in the hope that it would order the council to re-tract the bylaw, but the premier was not to be blamed too severely because he said the issue was a local one.

The bylaw had been rushed thru council in a very improper manner. The speaker had had some experience in municipal affairs, but he had never known an instance before when an important bylaw was given three read-ings in one day. Had the final reading been deferred, the citizens would have had time to awaken to the fact that the matter was serious and would have petitioned against it.

Another reason for repeal was that, owing to the great growth of the city, population there was not enough hotel accommodation, especially in view of Toronto's reputation as a convention city.

Another reason was that property rights were ignored with provision for compensation, as in the case of the English license measure.

Mr. Boswell quoted several visiting United States clergymen as having said that Toronto was exemplary in its freedom from drunkenness, and also cited from an address given by Controller Spence in Chicago, in which he stated that Toronto was the only city in the world that had not been visited by a reference to the controller's recent declaration that he would trust anybody other than the city council to appoint a parks commission. He concluded by expressing the hope that the city council would treat the citizens justly.

The Voice of Labor. President J. H. Kennedy of the Trades and Labor Council, said he was more than pleased to be able to represent the views of one of the most important civic bodies. There was nobody more interested in the welfare of the city at large than the workmen and trades unionists, who approved the bylaw. It was a cardinal principle of right and justice that the voice of the people should always prevail.

aldermen who, first, last and all the time had been shouting that the voice of the people must rule.

"There are men in the council not worthy of the confidence of the people who put them there," declared Mr. Kennedy, amid great volleys of applause.

Some of the aldermen had been carried away by the "nice smiling ways" of the Controller Spence, said the speaker, who was very grateful that Ald. Kennedy, the "apostle of the initiative and referendum," had been carried away with the rest.

Much laughter was occasioned by the question why reduction had not been mentioned in the late civic campaign? and why the power bylaw, on which all the interest was then centred, had been allowed to "sink into oblivion."

It wasn't. "Was that British fair play?" he queried, and there was a thundering "No."

Mr. Kennedy made telling use of the argument that the hotel tax had been grossly deceived. One hotelkeeper he knew had spent $37,000 on a supposed guarantee of security.

Much laughter was occasioned by the speaker's reference to members of the city council as having nothing at stake, and who "had to take advantage of the technicalities of law to qualify."

The audience was vastly tickled by the allusion and the hall shook with laughter and applause.

"I hope council will realize its duty and make amends for its drastic action," he wound up.

The chairman read a communication from Thomas Roden, president of the Employers' Association, regretting inability to attend, and stating that he fully endorsed the protest against the "arbitrary action" of the council.

The speaker asserted that the non-employment of 150 cigarmakers was largely due to the bylaw. Instead of carrying 50,000 to 70,000 cigars in stock, only from 2000 to 3000 were being carried, owing to uncertainty as to the future.

Mr. Hensy said he spoke for about 17,000 workmen, who, as to the power bylaw, in which the three aldermen named had proven recalcitrant.

Father Minchin's Anonymous Writings. Rev. Father Minchin, who, in his full mantle for the applause to subside, remarked that he had received a number of anonymous letters, taxing him with inconsistency, he having two years ago strongly advocated reduction.

These unknown letter-writers reminded him of an utterance of Father Froul regarding a certain society in Dublin that way had "neither a body to be kicked or a soul to be damned."

"No insults, please," interjected a feminine voice from the gallery. "If I am insulting anonymous letter-

Howland's time was rather the other way. "Does it appear very safe making the liquor trade a monopoly to give the absolute patronage of it to the council?"

"Yours faithfully, Goldwin Smith." Prof. Clark for Justice.

Rev. Prof. Clark said he was present as one who wished to speak in favor of justice. He referred to the manner in which he had answered criticism some years ago, when he spoke in advocacy of Sunday cars, by saying that he did what he was himself able to enjoy, namely, transportation to and from church.

He was not inspired by any motives as an owner of a tavern or tavern property, but was present to protect against interfering with the people's rights.

"If the proposal is to take away property from hotelkeepers, it is sheer robbery," he declared. "They didn't go into business by stealth, but with the permission of the government, and it should be for the government to say if they have done anything wrong. They went into business as any other merchant under the sanction of the law of the land. I have never heard of a more monstrous proposition than to take away from them their business."

He expressed his belief that the people would be able to prevent it if it came, he concluded.

Calls Bylaw an Insult. Robert Hoekings, president of the International Bookbinders' Union, declared that it was up to the people to tell council what they thought of such unjust action. If they changed their opinions on reduction, the fair way was to give them an opportunity to do so.

How Speakers at W.C.T.U. Supper Referred to Indignation Meeting Up Above.

If the young lady who was taking tickets for the W.C.T.U. banquet in the basement of Massey Hall last night hadn't been strictly conscientious there would have been a good many ticketholders for the indignation meeting over the license reduction bylaw.

Another man spent two of the most uncomfortable hours of his life listening to Rev. C. O. Johnston and Joseph Gibson, president of the Dominion Alliance, nail at the motive of the bylaw above."

The W.C.T.U. have reason to be congratulated upon the success of their function, which was attended by about 600 adults—enthusiastic in spite of the numerous thunderous detonations from the floor above.

He had told his auditors once regarding certain things of his life higher than the floor above, yet they were not to look out; his church was not entirely free from the talons of the liquor traffic. He understood that the same preacher was scheduled to speak on that platform (pointing to the ceiling) to-night.

He was interrupted by a deafening roar from the stand and a stamping which shook the building.

One consolation. He was interrupted by a deafening roar from the stand and a stamping which shook the building.

He recalled the downfall of the Ross government as a warning for the Whitley administration.

Joseph Gibson, president of the Ontario branch of the Dominion Alliance, who was introduced as the Elijah of the temperance movement and the prophet of fire, said that he did not feel altogether unkindly against the people who occupied the seats above heads.

He then read the resolution, which was seconded by Prof. Clark, and was adopted on motion of the chairman, amid much enthusiasm.

A. W. Wright, in moving the appointment of a committee, said he had been informed during the recent campaign a secret meeting was held in the office of a doctor on Bloor-street to arrange for the overthrow of the people's will.

He then read the resolution, which was seconded by Prof. Clark, and was adopted on motion of the chairman, amid much enthusiasm.
