

to the great reunion of the immortal church above ; assured at the same time that if this work is faithfully carried on, in a few years, there will be more than one Association of French Baptist Churches in the midst of the French population.

FELLER INSTITUTE.

In last year's report, reference was made to a work of grace going on in the school, and the hope was expressed that nothing would happen to check it. It pleased God to grant this desire, and the cheering result was that more than thirty young men and women accepted Christ as their Savior. Most of these professed their faith before leaving, and, so far as we have learned, they have all kept near the Lord. One of these, whose mother is a Roman Catholic, and who, on account of illness at home, could not return to school in the fall, wrote a friend saying she would, though some three hundred miles away, walk the entire distance if she could but return again to Grande Ligne. The poor girl's path is not strewn with roses, for it is said that both mother and sister persecute her. Another young girl, situated in very similar circumstances, after striving a long time with the spirit, yielded to the call, came to Christ and confessed her faith. She then went home to take care of her invalid mother, who died shortly after, and soon she had the pleasure of being the instrument, in God's hands, of bringing her unconverted father to Christ.

May the Good Shepherd keep all these lambs and bring many more into His fold.

School opened the 2nd October with 82 pupils admitted out of 125 applications received. In order to accommodate even so great a number as this, rooms for 15 had to be provided outside. Twelve Roman Catholics applied for admission but of these, three were refused, chiefly because of their age, two decided not to come and seven were received.

We regret not to report more Roman Catholics as attending our school, but we remember it is far easier to produce a lasting impression on a few than on many, as they are likely to form
