TELLS THE STORY OF IOWA BUFFALO

"Uncle" Peter Miles, Now Living, Has Shot the Bison Thro' Within the Last Fifty Years.

LAKE CITY, Ia., Saturday.—Mr. Peter Miles, who has lived here for nearly forty-five years—it will be forty-five years next month—has been much interested in the stories that have been appearing in the newspapers with respect to the buffalo in Iowa. There has been some controversy as to whether any living man here and there could be traced to the site of this city.

There were many elk, some deer and a few buffalo left in the country when he came here, September 20, 1864. In the winter of 1865 a large herd of elk came from the north into the hills here and stayed for some time. "Further away," they said, "bigger and grader than this—beyond conception."

In the historical National Museum at Santa Fe, where relics or even the extinct Aztecs abound, Professor Hewitt was interested by a huge bowl of hardwood, with a strange bottom in strange contrast with the usual curve of ancient pottery. On the outside of the bowl were hieroglyphics which had defied translation.

REFERENCE TO "SQUARE BOWLS"

In a long forgotten Spanish manuscript which he found among the hundreds on the museum shelves, Professor Hewitt discovered a reference to "makers of square bowls." Most of the manuscript was undeciphered, but here and there could be translated passages which suggested the legends of isolated spots where the Aztecs were to the north. A tracing of hieroglyphics on a frayed and worn vase was the first clue.

Professor Hewitt was impressed with the stories of the Indians after these discoveries. He went to Spain and there found more than a thousand manuscripts bearing upon the Spanish occupation and rule of the Southwest—section of the United States centuries ago.

Some of these were translated. In some were related the stories of the unknown people in the depths of a great canyon in the "middle of a great desert." They gave directions which had become vague with the Indians and among the Pueblos.

When he returned Dr. Hewitt, accompanied by a Navajo guide who assured him he could recognize the mysterious city if he should so it, left Gallup, N. M., with a small pack train for a trip across the desert to the Squash Mountain, an isolated range in the very heart of the desert. Here, hidden in a canyon, which is said to rival even the Grand Canyon for size penitentiary for residing an office. Mr. Miles does not mix other things with his business as marshal, and though he knows more of the hidden secrets of the people of Lake City than any other man every one feels that these secrets are perfectly safe with "Uncle Pete." So well acquainted is he with the people of the town that he can tell by the football who is coming as far away as football can be heard.

EDMUNSTON, N. B., Aug. 20.—A few minutes before 10 o'clock last night, fire was discovered in the store of Mr. Robert W. Hammond, and ended in the complete destruction of the whole building. The fire started in the office in the rear of the front store and before it was discovered had made considerable headway. The building was an old wooden structure owned by Mr. William Emmerson, and the fire made very rapid progress. Mr. Hammond had a stock of clothing, furnishings, dry goods, millinery and fancy goods valued at over $45,000, and the stock was almost completely destroyed. A considerable quantity of the stock in the front store was saved in a damaged condition, but it was impossible to save any of the stock in the back store or on the second floor.

There was no insurance on the building and about $5,000 insurance on the stock. The cause of the fire is unknown. Mr. Hammond left the store only about thirty minutes before the fire was discovered, and there was no fire or lights in the building. Parties had been in the office smoking and there is a belief that it might have started from a match carelessly dropped or a burning cigar.

MODERN SKYSCRAPERS WOULD BE LOST IN ARIZONA CAVE

Professor of Archaeology Tells of Wonderful Canyons and Writings of an Unknown Race Found on Trip Into Country with Navajo Indian Guide.

DENVER, Col., Aug. 20.—Professor Edgar L. Hewitt, director of the American School of Archaeology, at Santa Fe, N. M., announced that preparations for an extended trip of exploration of the ancient ruins and marvelous caves in the heart of the Navajo Indian reservation in Arizona, recently discovered by him, are now well under way.

A number of prominent archaeologists have asked to be allowed to accompany the expedition, which will start probably early in the fall from Santa Fe, headed by Professor Hewitt.

A thorough examination of the ruins will be made, the party guided by ancient Spanish manuscripts now in possession of Professor Hewitt, and it is considered certain that the result will be a written record of a race of which historians now are ignorant.

The incidents which had a direct bearing upon the discovery of Professor Hewitt—a discovery which promises to add a number of remarkable chapters to the history of North America—read like a romance.

The existence of a mysterious, deserted village of weird architecture in the recesses of a great canyon "far to the north" long has been the subject of the legends of the Navajo and Montezuma Indians of Arizona. Among the Pueblos of New Mexico tales handed down from forgotten generations are told of a strange race of "big men" who, long ago, inhabited a land "far to the northwest."

A number of years ago Professor Hewitt began his investigations of these legends. He headed a number of exploration parties into unknown Arizona territory.

In the Canyon d'Chelle and the Pottery Mountain, a hundred miles into the desert, signs of the cliff dwellers were found on every hand, but the Indians and Pueblos who were taken along shook their heads. "Further away," they said, "bigger and grader than this—beyond conception."

In the historical National Museum at Santa Fe, where relics or even the extinct Aztecs abound, Professor Hewitt was interested by a huge bowl of hardwood, with a strange bottom in strange contrast with the usual curve of ancient pottery. On the outside of the bowl were hieroglyphics which had defied translation.
