Poetry.

THE SLAVE MOTHER.

The sheeted dead lay mouldering there,
Where'er and when we marked the spot,
Who knew and wailed no mother's care
But Hers, the mother-slave of Guinea,
Hearts joyless, wifeless, childless!

By sacred words the hours of Time
Were counted—and the days and years:
The sighs of all—and tears of each—
The what's deep burden, and private anguish,
No thought, she gave it thought.

Whether it fell in gentle showers,
Or rattling pattered on the roof,
Signs heard or felt, showed there was
And showed them with the strength to bless
The gift of Liberty.

There many a mother with her babes
Strove wildly to embrace the shore,
Where Freedom beckoned with a smile,
Then' worth and guilt, pain and toil,
To soothe her heart or save.

Yes! tho' the bitter wintry waters
Of snow and sleet, and thaw above her
—The Lord is Heathen—but the very,
Yet may the plaintive prayer that defies,
To quench her life-long woe.

Again, down thro' struggles—almost yearning,
Retaining the heart, limb, senses, and brain,
By the greatest love endurance
To wing the gulf which grey discovered
Life from its hell of pain.

And hugging to her panting breast,
The life that floweth from her eyes,
Such thus to crush the fear that raged—
In that embrace the grief savage,
To mothers only known.

And when, alas! 'tis all in vain—
When ruthless arms affright the air,
And cord and shutter'd hope drops dead,
All that she sought, forever fled—
Her soul sucked by despair—

Then may the gods above invoke
Unto the Lord who reigns above,
And armed with a will sublime
Inflict a blow that thro' all time
Shall tell her Spartan love:

Then may she raise the flashing blade
Above her core—her life—her child—
Plunge deep in the unrepentant fold,
That thro' death's breach the soul may glide
To heaven undefiled.

We go forth, a one and day hath send,
For Freedom dawning every land—
Embracing stranger, want, and toil,
In the wild hope her foes to foil,
The goal of rest to gain.

Heroic Woman! thy deep love—
The sacrifice of thy heart's strife—
The Faith pledged to thy infant's trust—
With awe, shame, grief, and pity dyed,
The crowd of human life.

History's paged, honest page
Thy tragic deed shall consecrate,
And send the artists of fame,
Shall cherish thy soul-thrilling name
With the immortal great.

It then were content to grow rich somewhat more slowly, they would grow rich more surely. If they would use their capital within reasonable limits, and transact with it only so much business as it could fairly control, they would be far less liable to lose it. Excessive profits involve the liability of great risks; as in a lottery, in which there are high prizes, there must be a great proportion of blanks.

Let a man live as long as he will, the first fifty years of his life will always seem the longest; and the daily routine of our every years soon like the sound of a clock, while the hands on the outside and the movement within mark the passing of time to others, till the weights have run down, and the pendulum stands still.

It was a law of old times in England, that if a man, travelling in the King's highway be robbed, between sun and sun, satisfaction is recoverable on the County, where the robbery was made; but if he takes his journey in the night, being an unseasonable time, then it is at his own peril. He must take what falls. So if a man keeps in Cities ways, he shall be sure of God's protection; but if he strays out of them, he expooseth himself to danger.

Words are little things, but they strike hard.—We wield them so easily, that we are apt to forget their hidden power. Fitly spoken, they fall like the sunshine, the dew, and the fertilizing rain—but when unfitly, like the frost, the hail, and the desolating tempest.
